In the past, the region including Beyşehir Lake was known as Pisidya. It was the name of a city in Pisidia known as Karallia. Ramsay evaluates this issue as follows; "There were probably two cities, one in the southeast of the lake, at the mouth of the water flowing into Lake Trogitis, and the other in the southwest. Since the latter is more likely to be Parlais, you have to accept the first as Karallia. . " Again, according to Ramsay, Karallia was named Skleros during the Byzantine period. Karallia, which was later destroyed, was named Viranşehir. THE ONLY KNOWN EXAMPLE! great position awesome brown patina |

Very rare and undoubtedly among the finest known examples. A magnificent, very well struck and beautifully patinated piece with a splendid portrait. Good very fine. Aristobulus is certainly among the most fascinating of the numerous 1st century Roman client kings. Born the son of Herod of Chalcis and the great-grandson of Herod the Great, and appointed by Nero to King of Armenia Minor in 54, his life is closely entwined with Roman, Jewish and Armenian history. The most famous event in his life, however, revolves around the infamous Jewish princess Salome, whom Aristobulus married in 34 (for a longer note on Salome, see below, lot 1355). - 607 "Beschreibung Judaea. Hasmoneans. Mattathias Antigonos (Mattatayah) Æ Prutah. Circa 40-37 BC. ""Mattatayah the Priest"" in Paleo-Hebrew script around showbread table / ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ANT, seven-branched menorah. TJC 41; Sofaer 446; AJC I Group Z; Samuels 46; Hendin 1168. Very Rare; the only ancient Jewish coin type depicting the menorah. This coin represents what it probably the most important type in Jewish numismatics. Struck towards the end of his doomed conflict with Herod, this type was issued by Mattathias Antigonos whilst besieged in Jerusalem. During the Second Temple period, depictions of these most sacred of artefacts were prohibited, thus their appearance on this coinage was both unprecedented and extremely significant. A member of the Hasmonean dynasty and High Priest, Mattathias must have intended this coinage to serve an inspirational function. The showbread table and menorah are direct references to the temple itself, and are probably intended to instill in the populace a fear that these holy objects might fall into the hands of the besieging army. This army, though nominally commanded by Herod who was himself a Jew, was largely a Roman force sent by Marc Antony, and led by Gaius Sosius. That the showbread table and the menorah could fall into Roman hands would have been unthinkable, and indeed during the assault of the city the defenders fought bitterly until they were driven back into the Temple's inner court and overrun by Roman troops. Only by bribing Sosius and his officers was Herod able to spare the temple from being sacked. That such important types should be struck on flans far smaller than the dies is perhaps disappointing, but not at all surprising given the siege conditions of its issue and the lack of provisions and material within the city. As a depiction of the menorah though, this type is of the greatest importance and interest. Its form here is identical to its appearance on the Arch of Titus in Rome as it was carried in triumphal procession following the sack of Jerusalem in AD 70." Condition Very Good 2.4 gr. 24 mm.
