SNG Copenhagen 505. Extremely Rare. This coin is from the earliest issue of coinage at Tenedos. Although some place this issue in the late 6th century, there are no coins of this type in any hoard recorded before the mid-4th century. In fact, only two 4th century hoards record coins of Tenedos: Troas, 1969 (IGCH 1188), deposited c. 450 BC, and Massyaf, 1961 (IGCH 1483 = CH 8, 587 = CH 9, 362), deposited c. 425-420 BC. The former contained two coins of Tenedos, but further information was not recorded. The second hoard, however, contained a single didrachm, which was from the same issue as the present coin (cf. C.M. Kraay &amp; P.R.S. Moorey, "Two fifth century hoards from the Near East," RN 1968, pl. XXVI, 57). That coin exhibits little wear, supporting a likely date of issue in the early to mid 5th century BC. Reference CNG Electronic Auction 455/131 . Condition: Extremely Fine. Weight: 7.54g. Rosen 369. 1,01g, 7,9mm, 4h. Extremely Fine. Extremely Rare, Extremely Rare, one of perhaps ten known specimens. From the collection of P.R., United Kingdom. The mythical Sirens are best known to us from two ancient epics: the 'Argonautica' by Apollonios, in which Jason and the Argonauts have to travel past them on their quest for the Golden Fleece, and Homer's 'Odyssey', where they are portrayed as a pair of dangerous creatures that lure passing sailors to their deaths with their sweet music (Odyssey XII, 40). They are supposed to have inhabited an island with a particularly rocky shoreline onto which sailors would be drawn by their desire to hear the Sirens sing, leading to shipwreck. Speaking to Odysseus and warning him of the dangers he would encounter further into his journey, Queen Circe describes the Sirens as sitting in a meadow, with around them "a great heap of bones of mouldering men" (XII, 45). Although later depicted as women with wings, feathery tails and scaly bird-like feet, and eventually as mermaids, whose bodies were as seductive as their voices, depictions of the Sirens in early Greek art were as they appear on this coin, combining the body of a bird with the head of a woman, as can be seen on the 'Siren Vase', now in the British Museum, decorated in c. 480-470 BC and roughly contemporaneous with this coin. Starting price: 160 EUREstimate: 200 EUR |

SNG France -. SNG von Aulock -. Von Fritze III - (but cf. p. 24, 6). Extremely rare, probably unique . An impressive coin of great beauty and charm with a fine dark patina; traces of a centering mark on the obverse and reverse. Some traces of minor cleaning marks, other-wise , extremely fine. Ex Numismatica Genevensis V, 2 December 2008, 106 (but reverse misdescribed). This exceptional coin forms part of an extensive series of 'medallions' that were produced at some time during the reign of Commodus. At least twelve others are known, all with differing reverses (listed by von Fritze as noted above) that refer to the gods and goddesses of Kyzikos and to the city's relations with the Emperor. Counting this new piece, three bear chariots on their reverses: one with Demeter in her biga drawn by winged snakes, another supposedly again with Demeter but in a biga drawn by centaurs, and this one with Dionysos and his panthers. The engraver responsible for the dies of this series was exceptionally talented. Starting price: 160 EUREstimate: 320 EUR |

Howgego, Coinage and Military Finance: the Imperial Bronze Coinage of the Augustan East, in NC 1983, p. 7, 2a, pl. 1, 9; RIC 501 (Pergamum); BMCRE 713 (Pergamum); CBN 956 (Pergamum); RPC 2233 (Asia). 25,22g, 22,1mm, 12h. Good Very Fine; a bold and attractive portrait of Augustus. Acquired from Leu Numismatik AG. The mint identity and reverse legend of the Augustan CA issues has long been discussed (for a survey of theories see RPC I, pp. 380-381), but the reverse 'CA' may refer to the stabilised Communitas Asiae. Following the defeat of Antony and Cleopatra, Augustus returned to Italy via Asia, most likely personally sanctioning at Pergamum the temple dedicated to himself and Rome. At the end of the civil war, Augustus sought to restore peace to the empire and to reinforce her frontiers. This was achieved by establishing diplomatic relations with the surrounding rulers, and the placement of Agrippa as proconsul of Asia Minor once Augustus had returned to Rome in 19 BC. Starting price: 80 EUREstimate: 100 EUR |

Kovacs 203. Very rare. Very fine. From the collection of Jean-Pierre Righetti, inv. no. 10013 (with collector's ticket), privately purchased on 20 July 2009. The legends on this issue are often blundered and hard to read, but it was probably struck by Tiridates II, whose father Chosroes was disposed by Caracalla in 214 or 216. Tiridates II was recognized as King of Armenia by Macrinus in 217 and the first Armenian King to strike coins since Tigranes VI in 66/7 AD - yet, as it turned out, also the last. He initially proved to be quite a successful ruler, but was eventually expelled from Armenia in 252 by the Sasanids under Shapur. Starting price: 40 EUREstimate: 50 EUR |

[+ IHSXS-RISTYS *] Bust of Jesus, front, cross behind his head, holding a blessed Bible with his right hand and a Bible with large stones in his left hand. Wearing khlamys and himation. The writing on the environment begins with the cross. Rev. + RO [MAN 'XRIST] OF, ... CONSTANT b R, (' Romanus, Chistopher and Constantine, the emperors of the Romans') In the middle, Romanus I is crowned with a cross, pendile, holding the akakia with his right hand, the sphere with the cross with his left hand; behind, with two crowns, the smaller figure of Christopher (left) and Constantine VII (right). (dated about 929-931). A very interesting and very impressive imperial dynasty seal. The seal is in very good condition. VII. Constantine was emperor from childhood, but it was the Armenian admiral Romanus Lecapenus who wielded real power in the empire and became Constantine's co-regent in 920. Romanus strengthened his position by raising his eldest son, Christopher, as co-emperor in 921. Porphyrogenitus, referring to his imperial lineage as the son of Leo VI. Although Constantine was the so-called 'senior' emperor, the dynastic seals prove that Romanus' son Christopher actually had a higher status, before Constantine's names were preceded by the names of Romanus and Christopher. The seal may be dated 929-931, and this is the last and best sphragistic representation of the unconventional imperial constellation. (Source: Seibt / Zarnitz 1.1.4. - 838  Byzantine Lead Seal Justinianus I (527-565) Obverse, bust of Justinian I, frontal, with halo, without beard. Diadem with a helmet and trifolium and pendilia on its head. He wears khlamys fastened with fibula on his right shoulder. Environment writing: [DNIVSTINIA] NVS PP [AVG] D (ominus) n (oster) Iustinianus p (er) p (etuu) aug (ustus) Back face, Winged Victoria standing front. Wearing Khiton. He holds the triumphal crown with double ribbons in his right and left hands. The cross in the lower right space. Date: 527-565. Perpetuus: II from Probus. Perpetuus, which was used as the title of emperor until Leon; P was abbreviated as PERP or PP. PP is also short for pater patriae; however, since it is written augustus on the back here, it cannot be patriae. There should also be a cross in the lower left cavity of the back, but the seal was broken. Justinianus was a devout Christian ruler and this is reflected in his seals. The cross was first imprinted on its seals, and its portrait on the seal is a halo. II. The portrait of the Justinianus is also hallowed in the seal, but later portraits of the emperors were haloless until the Palaiologos Period. (Seibt 1978: 59) Similar to the portrait of Justinianus on this seal, it is also present on his coins, but it is haphazard. (BMC: 27, No. 17, Plate IV, No. 12; Sear 1987 No. 140). There is another type seal of Justinianus, which has a monogram instead of a portrait on the obverse (Seibt 1978: No. 7). The same monogram is also present in the column headings of Hagia Sophia. Deity standing on a lion to right, facing an attendant standing to left, who holds an uncertain object in his raised right hand and another one in his left; in upper left field, star with central pellet and pellet-in-annulet below; in upper right field, star; all within border decorated with pellets and lines in two concentric circles. Rev. Field decorated with pellets. An attractively designed amulet with an intriguing scene. Good very fine. Several deities from antiquity were portrayed in association with lions, especially solar deities. The imagery on our amulet resembles the Anatolian sun god Sandan who is portrayed on coins of the Seleucids and on the Roman provincial coinage of the Cilician city of Tarsus. Some hardstone amulets, too, portray Helios standing on a lion, as well as a winged deity usually described as Pantheos. Starting price: 160 EUR Estimate: 200 EUR
