Casabonne Series 5, Group B; Göktürk –; SNG France –; SNG Levante 190 (Myriandros); Sunrise 62 corr. From the Sunrise Collection. The attribution of the walking-lion series of Mazaios had originally been given to the mint of Tarsos, but Newell argued that they more likely were struck at Myriandros in his study of that mint in AJN 53 (1919). Later, J.D. Bing, in AJN 1 (1989), argued for an alternative attribution of the Myriandros coinage to the mint of Issos. While most numismatic works continue to follow Newell, Casabonne's significant study of Cilicia during the Persian period convincingly returns these coins of Mazaios to the mint of Tarsos (cf. Casabonne, pp. 215-7). Condition: Very Fine Weight: 0.7 gr Diameter: 10 mm 1

260 SELEUKID KINGS of SYRIA. Antiochos I Soter. 280-261 BC. AR Tetradrachm. Sardes mint. Struck circa 276-272 BC. Diademed and horned head of Seleukos I right / Apollo seated left on omphalos, holding bow; monogram to inner left and in exergue. SC 323.2b; cf. SNG Spaer 231; WSM 1366. The Seleukid royal court was resident in Sardes during the period 276-274 BC and occasionally thereafter until about 271. The city was a convenient center for operations against rebellious cities in Asia Minor and conflicts with Egypt over the possession of Syria. During this period, Antiochos struck a series of tetradrachms honoring the memory of the founder of the dynasty, Seleukos I with a remarkable portrait. Seleukos is shown as an elderly man, with a lined, time-worn face, but also with the horn signifying divinity and the unruly locks of hair similar to those of Lysimachos that reveal Alexander's claim to godhood. Seleukos is both the mortal who conquered Asia and the descendant of the semi-divine Alexander who established a world empire. Antiochos makes clear his intention to preserve that legacy. Extremely rare. The reverse of this coin recalls the second major conflict of Zeus' rise to power. After he had defeated the Titans in the Titanomachy and apportioned their former relatives to his fellow Olympians, he was compelled to resolve a conflict with the Giants, offspring of Gaia and Cronus. Known as the Gigantomachy, these chthonic half-man, half-serpent creatures attempted to wrestle power from the Olympians by casting them out of Olympus. To accomplish this, the Giants attempted to reach Olympus by heaping up one mountain range on top of the other. From above, Zeus and the other Olympians defended themselves by hurling their weapons. In the end, however, it was the assistance of Hercules, that won the day. With the final defeat of the Giants, the rule of Zeus was no longer challenged. A great portrait and highly interesting reverse type. From Group CEM. RPC gives three possible identifications for the figure on the obverse: Claudius, Britannicus, and Germanicus. Britannicus is the most easily dismissable attribution; as RPC notes (p. 595) the nomenclature would be unlikely for such a date. Levante and Ziegler describe the figure as Claudius (the latter with a question mark), but the varying portrait style and the obverse legend "TIBERIO C KΛADIO C KAICAP" on a parallel issue of the same year casts serious doubt. Germanicus then seems the most likely. Condition: Very Fine Weight: 15.1 gr Diameter: 30 mm 1

Marciana, Trajan's sister, and her daughter Matidia lived in the Imperial palace during his reign and were also honored on Trajan's coinage. Together with his wife Plotina, this circle of females is credited by some with influencing Trajan's reforms of taxation and the establishment of a welfare scheme to help the poor (Alimentia). Upon her death on 29 August AD 112, Marciana was formally deified and honored with this attractive denarius issue, depicting an eagle bearing a scepter (signifying Marciana's soul) to the heavens. RIC II 118; BMCRE 251; BN 219ff; RSC 554. EF This important denarius was issued in the final six months of the emperor's life. The precision in the dating is facilitated by the reference to Vespasian's ninth consulship (COS VIII) assumed on New Year's Day, 79. The Zodiacal sign Capricorn appearing on the reverse is clearly reminiscent of the precious metal coinage of Augustus. The revival of earlier types, especially those of Rome's first emperor, is a feature of Vespasian's coinage. This program appears to draw parallels between the new dynasty, emerging from the chaos of the Civil Wars of 68-69 AD, and the Julio-Claudians who brought order following the civil strife of the imperial period. The globe appearing beneath the capricorn is a symbol of world dominion. Condition: Excellent Fine Weight: 3.2 gr Diameter: 17 mm 1

Commentary: Sandrovskaja/Seibt 62. Spink 132 (Zacos sale II), 130. Wassiliou-Seibt, Corpus II, 1618. A very important seal of great historical interest, beautifully preserved. The Armenian officer Theodoros Chetames is mentioned by Michael the Syrian as the first commander of Melitene. He was installed in 1074 by the 'generalissimus' Philaretos Brachamios amidst the chaos in the aftermath of the Battle of Manzikert, when he bore the Byzantine court dignity of kouropalates, as evidenced by our seal. Two decades later, in 1094/95, Theodoros was appointed commander of Edessa by the Seljuk sultan Tutus, but proceeded to gain control of the city for himself (see the seal in Leu Web Auction 9 (2019), 1363), fighting off a Turkish siege in the process. In 1098, a small army of Crusader knights arrived in Edessa, headed by Baldwin of Boulogne. They were greeted into the city as allies, and Theodoros adopted Baldwin as his son and heir. However, events turned against him, and he was killed in a revolt, perhaps at the instigation of Baldwin, who thus secured Edessa as his own realm. Condition: Very Fine Weight: 12.7 gr Diameter: 25 mm 1

Comments: Tropaiophoros was seemingly the surname of Ioannes. Logariastēs (λογαριαστής, "accountant") was a type of financial official in the Byzantine Empire from the early 11th century onwards, with the task of controlling expenses. The post is attested for the first time in 1012, and existed both within the financial bureaux (sekreta) of the central government such as those of the logothetēs tou genikou, the chartoularios tou vestiariou and the sakellarios, as well as in the provincial administration, in monasteries or in private estates. Logariastai appear in the sources until the 15th century. Emperor Alexios I Komnenos (r. 1081–1118) created the post of megas logariastēs (μέγας λογαριαστής, "Grand Accountant"), first attested in 1094. Initially it shared the duty of general comptroller of the fisc with the sakellarios, but soon replaced the latter office entirely. The post is attested until the 14th century. In the mid-14th century Book of Offices of pseudo-Kodinos, the megas logariastēs is ranked 40th in the palace hierarchy, following the logothetēs tōn oikeiakōn and preceding the prōtokynēgos. According to pseudo-Kodinos, by his time he had no function, but was merely an honorific dignity. The costume of office was identical to that of the logothetēs tōn oikeiakōn, i.e. a turban (phakeōlis) and the epilourikon, probably a descendant of the middle Byzantine epilōrikon, a garment worn over armour. Created from the imperial retinue army, the Opsikion was the largest and most prestigious of the early themes, being located closest to Constantinople. Commentary: The seal is obviously unpublished in the present references. Between the several dignities of the present Damianos, the most remarkable is that of the comes of the imperial stables. The Count of the Stable (Latin: comes stabuli; Greek: κόμης τοῦ σταύλου/στάβλου, komēs tou staulou/stablou) was a late Roman and Byzantine office responsible for the horses and pack animals intended for use by the army and the imperial court. From Byzantium, it was adopted by the Franks, and is the origin of the post and title of constable, via the Old French conestable. The post first appears in the 4th century as the tribunus [sacri] stabuli ("tribune of the [sacred] stable"), initially responsible for the levying of horses from the provinces. The Byzantine office of the komēs tou staulou is best known during the 9th and 10th centuries, when it was classed as belonging to the group of military officials known as stratarchai. Along with the Logothete of the Herds (logothetēs tōn agelōn), he was responsible for the imperial horses in the capital, Constantinople, and for the horse ranches in the great army camp (aplēkton) at Malagina in Bithynia. He usually held the dignity of patrikios, and ranked 51st in the overall imperial hierarchy. During imperial processions, as well as during campaigns, he escorted the emperor along with the prōtostratōr, and played a role in the receptions of foreign ambassadors. 981 Byzantine bilingual lead seal of Kosmas asekrete (first half of 7th cent.) Obverse: Five letters in cruciform shape: KOCMA= Κοσμά (Of Kosmas), all within wreath border. Reverse: An S within a large latin a (in the form of U) = As(ekrete), all within wreath border. The term asekrete (Greek: ἀσηκρητής, romanized: asēkrētis, invariable form) designated a senior class of secretaries in the Byzantine imperial court in the 6th–12th centuries. The term is derived from the Latin a secretis, and in its full form was "asekrete of the court" (ἀσηκρητής τῆς αὐλῆς, asēkrētis tēs aulēs). It seems to be an innovation of the 6th century, as the contemporary historian Procopius of Caesarea found it necessary to explain it to his readers. Modern scholars have sometimes assumed that it dates to the 4th century, but the only reference to it, in the acts of the Council of Chalcedon, actually dates from a 6th-century translation of the document. The asekrete succeeded the referendarii as the senior-most members of the imperial secretariat, above the notarii. Some of them were attached to the praetorian prefectures. Seals of the office's holders survive from the 6th and 7th centuries, while a reference from the Third Council of Constantinople (680) indicates the existence of a senior asekrete who functioned as head of the class, probably the predecessor of the later protasekrete. The asekrete are attested as holding mid-level dignities, from the rank of protospatharios to spatharios and sometimes even lower. Eminent members of the class included the emperor Anastasios II (r. 715–717), and the Patriarchs of Constantinople Tarasios (784–806) and Nikephoros I (806–815). The office continues to be mentioned until the 12th century, after which it disappears, with the generic term grammatikos taking its place (cf. Kazdan et alii, Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium, I, p. 204). There are known several parallel seals of the owner of this seal Kosmas asekrete, proving his important dignity during first half of 7th cent. Condition: Very Fine Weight: 13.3 gr Diameter: 18 mm 1
