SNG Spencer-Churchill 49. SNG Lloyd 1252. About Very fine Much like the contemporary tetradrachms of Selinus, the designs on the didrachm are laden with complex symbolism that has drawn a variety of interpretations, some of which conflict with ancient literary evidence that, in theory, provides information to explain the coin type. The historian Diogenes Laertius, who early in the 3rd Century A.D. chronicled the lives and doctrines of ancient philosophers, preserves a deed that tradition attributed to Empedocles, a philosopher who lived at least five centuries earlier. Empedocles was said to have brought relief to Selinus, whose people suffered a pestilence from nearby brackish waters. He accomplished this feat by re-routing two rivers to bring fresh, flowing water of a different character into the marshes that were the source of pestilence. His effort was so successful that the people of Selinus began to worship him as a god. Since two river-gods are identified on the Classical-period coins of Selinus – the eponymous Selinus, and Hypsas – it might be assumed that these were the two rivers that Empedocles had diverted. However, A. H. Lloyd, in his 1935 study of the coin types of Selinus, noted that the course of the Hypsas is several miles from Selinus, and is separated by elevated territory that would make any such diversion impossible. Instead, Lloyd suggested the river diversion occurred at Acragas, and that during the five centuries that passed between the event and its retelling by Diogenes Laertius, the understanding of the true location was lost. As for the obverse type of Heracles subduing the Minoan bull, Lloyd considered it a canting reference to Selinus, which earlier had been named Heraclea Minoa. 168 Persis, Kings of Persis, Bagadat early – mid 3rd century BC Tetradrachm early-mid 3rd century BC, AR 29.00 mm., 16.12 g. Diademed head of Bagadat r., wearing kyrbasia and pendant earring. Rev. Aramaic legend on two lines Bagadat seated l. on high backed throne, holding cup and sceptre; in l. field, standard. Alram 511. BMC Arabia p. 195, 1. Sunrise 557. Very rare. Overstruck on a tetradrachm of Alexander III. Good Very fine. As the holdings of the Seleucids weakened in their eastern territories, the independent kingdoms of Parthia, Bactria and Persis emerged to fill the void. In the Persian homeland that long ago had given rise to the Achaemenid-Persian Empire, and in the future would give rise to the Sasanian Empire, Bagadat appears on the strength of numismatic evidence to have been the first king of the newly independent state of Persis in the mid-3rd Century B.C. Though interested in shedding any vestige of Greek rule, these new, local rulers found it useful to retain some conventions of Greek life, including coinage. The tetradrachms of Bagadat are decidedly non-Greek in appearance, yet the basic format of the early Persis coinage is firmly based in Greek traditions of the early Hellenistic period, including the choice of denominations, the use of a royal portrait on the obverse, the convex-concave fabric and the fabrication method through striking. We might add to this the obvious: so many early Persis tetradrachms used Greek coins as their planchets. The portrait of Bagadat is remarkable and exotic, with his impressive mustache, textured beard, large hoop earring and elaborate satrapal headdress, the bashlyk. This thoroughly oriental portrait offers a rare glimpse in to the culture of the priest-kings of Istakhr. While this reverse scene follows a Greek model (even down to the detail of the form of the throne, which is based on that found on so many tetradrachms of Alexander III), another of Bagadat shows him worshiping before the great fire altar of which he was the hereditary guardian in the faith of Zoroastrianism. A very attractive portrait struck in high relief, minor marks, otherwise About Extremely fine From a private British collection. The veiled portrait of Arsinoe II, sister-wife of King Ptolemy II, was iconic in the Hellenistic Age. It not only set the standard for the presentation of later Ptolemaic women, but it influenced monarchs who issued coins throughout the Mediterranean world, even into Roman times. After she died in July, 270 B.C., Arsinoe II was promptly deified, and coins mainly of large denominations – usually gold octodrachms and silver decadrachms – were produced in her honour. Remarkably, they continued to be struck under successive Ptolemaic kings for nearly 150 years, by which time the Ptolemies ceased issuing such impressive coins. This particular coin was struck at the provincial mint of Ake-Ptolemais, and is dated to year 35, which Troxell identifies as 251/0 B.C. This portrait shows a noblewoman of impeccable pedigree, the ideal of Greek womanhood. Her status as a queen is attested by the jewelled diadem at her forehead and the sceptre on the far side of her bust, and her divinity is revealed by the ram's horn that curls behind her ear. The diaphanous veil, however, may be the most arresting element of the design, as it envelops her head in high relief and trails downward in a way that provides the image with great dimension. The reverse is devoted wholly to the deified queen. The inscription ΑΡΣΙΝΟΗΣ ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΟΥ ("[coin] of Arsinoe, brother-lover") demonstrates her sibling relationship with her husband, King Ptolemy II, who issued this octodrachm. Furthermore, the double cornucopia is thought to be the personal badge of Arsinoe II, and it became inseparable with her veiled image, as both appear on the coins issued in her name until the late issues of King Ptolemy VIII, who died in 116 B.C. BMC –, cf. 12 (denarius). RIC 223. Calicó 474. CBN 99. Rare. Almost insignificant metal flaw on obverse, light traces of mounting, otherwise Very Fine. Ex Naville sale 72, 481. Almost more remarkable than Galba's legacy as an emperor for seven months in 68 and 69 is the life he enjoyed before he claimed the purple. He was among the wealthiest men in the empire, and is said not to have travelled anywhere, not even on a casual afternoon ride, with less than ten thousand gold pieces. Being so wealthy and belonging to a noble family, the Suplicii, it is not surprising that he held many important posts in Rome and in the provinces, and was a personal acquaintance of the Julio-Claudians. Galba began his association with the Julio-Claudians with a pinch on the cheek from Augustus when he was a child, and thereafter he was a personal acquaintance of the emperors from Tiberius onward to Nero, whom he overthrew in 68. Agrippina Junior apparently was infatuated with him, and he enjoyed especially close friendships with Claudius and Livia. Suetonius tells us Livia made Galba her principal heir, leaving him 500,000 aurei, but that Tiberius nullified her bequest on a technicality, reducing the amount to only 5,000. The reverse of this aureus depicts the standing figure of Livia, who had been deified since the accession of her grandson Claudius in 41. The point is clear: Galba advertises his famous attachment to the early Julio-Claudians, and specifically to the first empress Livia. In doing so he offers proof of his fitness to wear the purple as the first non-Julio-Claudian to claim that honour. It was an appropriate message in this age of chaos and civil war, when faith in the more recent Julio-Claudians had been justifiably shaken, and Galba proposed a return to the severitas of a bygone era. Wonderful brownish tone, minor smoothing on edge, otherwise About extremely fine Ex CNG sale 55, 2000, 1217. From a private English collection. After the conquest of Dacia there was an interval of relative peace, until in 114 when some troubles began with the Parthians on the eastern frontier. The Parthians had placed their king in Armenia, thereby upsetting the balance of power that existed in the East with Armenia acting in the middle between Rome and Parthia. Trajan responded quickly: he annexed Armenia as another Roman province and then extended operations into Mesopotamia, conquering it by 116, including the Parthian capital of Ctesiphon. Trajan's intervention in Parthian affairs proved short-lived. The rival kings Vologases III and Osroes I continued to fight for the throne, and Parthaspates' role as Roman puppet did not last beyond the withdrawal of the legions from Parthian territory after Trajan's death in 117 AD. Hadrian finally installed him as a minor king in Armenia. Traces of edge filling and pierced, otherwise Very fine In 204 the Severans, now a firmly established dynasty, held Saecular Games (Ludi Saeculares) with sacrifices, a donative, Circus races and games, all of which they represented on coin types. It is worth speculating that this is a compression of two separate events, as the four quadrigae above the ship may well represent the Circus races since they are not mentioned in the otherwise superb description by the historian Dio Cassius: "The whole construction in the amphitheatre was constructed in the form of a ship, and was so conceived that 400 beasts might be received into it, and at the same time be sent forth from it. Then, when it suddenly collapsed there issued out of it bears, lionesses, panthers, lions, ostriches, wild asses and bison, so that seven hundred beasts, both wild and domesticated, were seen running about at the same time and were slaughtered." (LXXVII, 4-5). The type is so cleverly engraved that many fittings on the deck of the ship are clearly identifiable, as are each of the seven beasts below. Indeed, a viewer of this coin with the commentary of Dio fresh in the mind might almost believe they are witnessing the spectacle unfolding.
