Dark tone, unsigned work of Exakestidas, a portrait of enchanting beauty, minor die break on the eye, otherwise Extremely fine According to tradition, Syracuse was founded by Greek colonists from Corinth under the leadership of Archias in 734 BC. The Syracusan's initial settlement was just off shore on the island of Ortygia. In later times, it would be from this fortress island that Syracuse's tyrants controlled the rest of the city. The natural spring on the island, which provided its water supply, was named Arethusa. It is the image of the goddess of this spring which dominates the early coinage of Syracuse. For the coinage of Syracuse, there are two elements which must be valued in their importance: the great tradition of master engravers and, on the other, the political economic and military situations. The first bronze issues are sometimes attributed to the master engravers: Kimon, Euainetos, Phrygillos, Eukleidas, Eumenes and other unidentified. According Calciati the model for the head on the obverse is derived from the facing head of Arethusa by Kimon. This issue is usually attributed to Exakestidas because there are several specimens signed E or Ex. Exakestidas was a Sicilian engraver, active at the end of the V century BC, who signed tetrachms and didrachms of Camarina. We don't have other information about him other than the signature placed on the dies engraved by him. However, the stylistic evidence of many coins of this series reveals such significant differences that the intervention of other engravers seems to be certain. From a private British collection The veiled portrait of Arsinoe II, sister-wife of King Ptolemy II, was iconic in the Hellenistic Age. It not only set the standard for the presentation of later Ptolemaic women, but it influenced monarchs who issued coins throughout the Mediterranean world, even into Roman times. After she died in July, 270 B.C., Arsinoe II was promptly deified, and coins mainly of large denominations – usually gold octodrachms and silver decadrachms – were produced in her honour. Remarkably, they continued to be struck under successive Ptolemaic kings for nearly 150 years, by which time the Ptolemies ceased issuing such impressive coins. This particular coin was struck at the provincial mint of Ake-Ptolemais, and is dated to year 35, which Troxell identifies as 251/0 B.C. This portrait shows a noblewoman of impeccable pedigree, the ideal of Greek womanhood. Her status as a queen is attested by the jewelled diadem at her forehead and the sceptre on the far side of her bust, and her divinity is revealed by the ram's horn that curls behind her ear. The diaphanous veil, however, may be the most arresting element of the design, as it envelops her head in high relief and trails downward in a way that provides the image with great dimension. The reverse is devoted wholly to the deified queen. The inscription ΑΡΣΙΝΟΗΣ ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΟΥ ([coin] of Arsinoe, brother-lover") demonstrates her sibling relationship with her husband, King Ptolemy II, who issued this octodrachm. Furthermore, the double cornucopia is thought to be the personal badge of Arsinoe II, and it became inseparable with her veiled image, as both appear on the coins issued in her name until the late issues of King Ptolemy VIII, who died in 116 B.C. The horse and the chariot were introduced into Egypt moderately late in its history, about 1500 BC. Chariots used to lead two horses, and they were used not only in fighting but also for ceremonies and hunting. Horses were raised in Egypt, and their rarity and novelty meant that they were a status symbol, owned only by rich and powerful people. They were given comprehensive care and personal names, grand stables and the best food. This particular specimen has Serapis on the back of the horse. 1'200

Jason asked King Aetes for the Golden Fleece, who agreed to give it only after a field had been plowed to bury the teeth of a dragon slain by Cadmus. This burial was to ensure the birth of armed men. The plow would have been pulled by two bulls with bronze feet that breathed fire. Jason, meanwhile, had the opportunity to meet Medea, a powerful sorceress and daughter of the king, and arrange for her to be married. Medea fell madly in love with Jason, so much so that she taught him some magic that could help him in his quest to get hold of the fleece. 400

After the conquest of Dacia there was an interval of relative peace, until in 114 when some troubles began with the Parthians on the eastern frontier. The Parthians had placed their king in Armenia, thereby upsetting the balance of power that existed in the East with Armenia acting in the middle between Rome and Parthia. Trajan responded quickly: he annexed Armenia as another Roman province and then extended operations into Mesopotamia, conquering it by 116, including the Parthian capital of Ctesiphon. Trajan's intervention in Parthian affairs proved short-lived. The rival kings Vologases III and Osroes I continued to fight for the throne, and Parthamaspat es' role as Roman puppet did not last beyond the withdrawal of the legions from Parthian territory after Trajan's death in 117 AD. Hadrian finally installed him as a minor king in Armenia. Pierced, traces of mounting and scuff on reverse, otherwise Good Very fine With the civil wars successfully behind him, a new Severan dynasty established, and Rome's external enemies at bay, the emperor Septimius Severus and his family were finally free to return to Rome. Their arrival in the capital in A.D. 202 after a long and circuitous route coincided with the tenth anniversary of Septimius Severus' reign, his decennalia, which was celebrated with magnificent games, a donative to the people, and a majestic triumph. If these festivities were indeed grand, the celebrations when Rome inaugurated a new age, or saeculum, just two years later in A.D. 204 were even more lavish: the Romans partied for an entire month! (Actually, in Rome lengthy celebrations were not all that unusual; extrapolating from Ovid's incomplete Fasti, the Romans spent about a third of the year celebrating various feriae (festivals) and ludi (games)). Again the celebrations consisted of magnificent games, sacrifices, and another welcome donative to the inhabitants of the city, all of which were presided over by the emperor and his two sons. The reverse of this coin shows Liber (or Bacchus) and Hercules, who together were patrons of Severus' home and feature prominently on the coinage struck at this time. The legend, LVDOS SAECVL(are)s FEC(it), leaves no doubt that the games were the gift of the emperor to the citizens of Rome. Triumphal arch of Severus, showing four columns surmounted by chariot of six horses; on either side, horseman. RIC 259. C 104. Extremely rare and Good Very fine From a private British collection. Roman architectural types have long been among the most sought-after coins by scholars, historians, archaeologists and collectors, not only because their designs are attractive, but because often they are of value in reconstructing the appearance of lost buildings, temples and monuments. Another category altogether is of coins depicting ancient structures that survive, the population of which is far smaller than the category of vanished structures. In terms of rarity and importance, the great prizes include provincial coins depicting the Acropolis in Athens, and, imperial coins depicting the Colosseum, the arch of Septimius Severus, and the Circus Maximus (even though its modern remains largely consist of an open field). This denarius depicts the Arcus Severi, the triumphal arch erected by Septimius Severus in honor of his defeat of Parthia early in 198. It was dedicated in 204, at which time asses depicting it were struck for Severus and Caracalla. The arch made its second and final appearance on denarii of 206 issued in the name of Severus in celebration of his fifteenth anniversary. Today the arch can still be seen at the north entrance of the Roman Forum; it is almost completely intact, though the statues that once decorated the roof are no longer present. They may have been removed in late antiquity or in the intervening millennium, during which time the Forum came to be filled with so much debris that even this imposing, 68-foot-tall monument was below ground level. Indeed, it was not until excavations by Carlo Fea in 1803 and subsequent efforts by the Napoleonic administration that the long-hidden arch began to be revealed. Bold swastika turning right, with Kharoshthi legend around Bhimarjuna Yolatakhma-putrasa Paratarajasa (of Bhimarjuna, son of Yolatakhma, king of the Paratas). Pieper 3298 Bhimarjuna appears to be a direct descendant of an earlier Parataraja king Arjuna. His name includes the name Arjuna combined with the name of Bhima, another heroic Pandava brother from the Hindu epic Mahabharata. Rare. Very Fine. Since no coins of any son of Arjuna are known, it is quite possible that Yolatakhma was Arjuna's son, and by extension, Bhimarjuna was Arjuna's grandson. A very rare copper stater of Hunnic king Mihirakula, son of Toramana. Mihirakula is known to have retired to Kashmir after suffering a defeat at the hands of Narsimha Gupta in the mid-6th century AD. The coins he issued there follow Kushan/ Kidarite prototypes. 40

794 Gupta Empire, Skandagupta (ruled c. 455-480 AD) Drachm circa 455-480, AR 11.20 mm., 1.67 g. King's bust facing right, wearing crown and pearl necklace. Rev. Bull seated r., with Brahmi legend around: Parama-bhagavata sri Skandagupta Kramaditya. MACW 4881 Rare. An attractive portrait with the king's name clearly visible on reverse. Very Fine. This is the rare bull type of Skandagupta, a numismatic innovation started by him late in his reign, that replaced the normal Garuda symbol on reverse with a Nandi bull. The Gupta emperors were devotees of Vishnu, so this change from a Vaishnavite symbol to a Shaivite symbol probably coincided with the decline of imperial power in Gujarat. The emperor may have found it necessary to shore up local alliances to keep the invading Huns at bay. If the local elites were devotees of Shiva, changing this symbol may have seemed a small price to pay to cement their loyalty. 50
