SNG Spencer-Churchill 49. SNG Lloyd 1252. About Very fine Much like the contemporary tetradrachms of Selinus, the designs on the didrachm are laden with complex symbolism that has drawn a variety of interpretations, some of which conflict with ancient literary evidence that, in theory, provides information to explain the coin type. The historian Diogenes Laertius, who early in the 3rd Century A.D. chronicled the lives and doctrines of ancient philosophers, preserves a deed that tradition attributed to Empedocles, a philosopher who lived at least five centuries earlier. Empedocles was said to have brought relief to Selinus, whose people suffered a pestilence from nearby brackish waters. He accomplished this feat by re-routing two rivers to bring fresh, flowing water of a different character into the marshes that were the source of pestilence. His effort was so successful that the people of Selinus began to worship him as a god. Since two river-gods are identified on the Classical-period coins of Selinus - the eponymous Selinus, and Hypsas - it might be assumed that these were the two rivers that Empedocles had diverted. However, A. H. Lloyd, in his 1935 study of the coin types of Selinus, noted that the course of the Hypsas is several miles from Selinus, and is separated by elevated territory that would make any such diversion impossible. Instead, Lloyd suggested the river diversion occurred at Acragas, and that during the five centuries that passed between the event and its retelling by Diogenes Laertius, the understanding of the true location was lost. As for the obverse type of Heracles subduing the Minoan bull, Lloyd considered it a canting reference to Selinus, which earlier had been named Heraclea Minoa. Much like the contemporary tetradrachms of Selinus, the designs on the didrachm are laden with complex symbolism that has drawn a variety of interpretations, some of which conflict with ancient literary evidence that, in theory, provides information to explain the coin type. The historian Diogenes Laertius, who early in the 3rd Century A.D. chronicled the lives and doctrines of ancient philosophers, preserves a deed that tradition attributed to Empedocles, a philosopher who lived at least five centuries earlier. Not since the contest of Marc Antony and Octavian a century before had Rome experienced civil war of consequence. First to support Vindex was Galba, then the governor of northern Spain, who declared himself Emperor on April 2, 68. Though Vindex was killed within two months of his rising, Galba continued the struggle against Nero, whose days clearly were numbered. Galba retained the title of Emperor until Nero died on June 9, 68, at which point the senate transferred to Galba the vacant title of Augustus. This rare denarius belongs to the early period of Galba's rise, prior to the death of Nero, and seemingly was struck at Tarraco, the capital of his old province Hispania Tarraconensis. Being perhaps the first issue struck by Galba, its types show Galba on horseback and celebrate the province that supported him and no doubt produced this coinage. Ceionius Commodus (Aelius Spartianus recounts his life in Historia Augusta) was of Etruscan origin. He became consul in AD 136, having been adopted by Hadrian in the summer of that year. His appointment came as a general surprise: according to the gossip, Hadrian chose him for his beauty, or perhaps because he considered him a suitable caretaker who would make way for his own favourite, M. Annius Verus, just fifteen years old at the time. In the opinion of Carcopino, Aelius had been adopted because he was Hadrian's illegitimate child. A wan figure with a delicate constitution, he suffered a heavy fall while making an address of thanks for Hadrian and died of a haemorrhage. The Historia Augusta (Vita Ael 7) tells us that "Hadrian had gigantic statues raised to Aelius Verus in all regions of the empire, temples too in some cities, and desired that Aelius' son Verus, who had remained within the imperial family after his father's death, be adopted as his grandson, by Antoninus Pius together with Marcus". From the outset of his reign, Philip I displayed a general gift of incompetence. He clearly was skilled enough to climb the ranks and then to treacherously eliminate the prefect Timesitheus and the emperor Gordian III, but once he had no peer to overcome it was clear that he did not have the talent to rule. Philip's first mistake was to make peace with the Sasanians on terms which were not only disgraceful to the army, but expensive. Zosimus (I, 20, 2) tells us this was the spark for the revolt of Jotapian among the Syrian legions. Philip had to pay a severe ransom to the Persians in exchange for Roman captives, while also having to absorb the expense of building his home town of Philippopolis in Arabia from the ground-up and staging lavish games for the millenary celebration in Rome. Another mistake was entrusting the administration of the East to his brother Priscus, who ruled harshly and increased taxation beyond what could be sustained. These circumstances brought forth Jotapian, an army commander who Aurelius Victor says was related to Severus Alexander, and who may in fact have been a descendant of the royal house of Commagene. Jotapian was proclaimed emperor by his soldiers and for several months may have controlled a vast area, for Polemius Sylvius places the revolt in Cappadocia and Victor describes it as having started in Syria (which, if true, could only include the northern part, for he did not strike coins at Antioch). Opinions on when the uprising began vary, with the conventional view being the summer of 248. But much light was shed on the subject by Roger Bland in a 1993 study, in which he suggests the revolt did not occur until the fall of 249. More importantly still, Bland produced convincing evidence that Jotapian's coins were struck at Nicopolis, a city located about 100 miles north of Antioch, quite near the former kingdom of Commagene. Bland catalogued only double-denarii for Jotapian, but since his study was published a piece of double-denarius weight but with a laureate bust has surfaced (CNG 61, lot 2027), allowing for the possibility, at least, that Jotapian coined aurei or intended to do so. From the outset of his reign, Philip I displayed a general gift of incompetence. 690 Irene, 797 – 802 Solidus Constantinople 797-802, AV 19.00 mm., 4.49 g. ΕΙΡΗΗ – ΒΑΣΙΛΙΣΣΗ Facing bust of Irene, wearing loros and crown with cross, four pinnacles and pendilia, holding globus cruciger and cross-tipped sceptre. Rev. •ΕΙΡΗΗ – ΒΑΣΙΛΙΣΣΗ Θ Facing bust of Irene, wearing loros and crown with cross, four pinnacles and pendilia, holding globus cruciger and cross-tipped sceptre. DO 1b. 9. Sear 1599. Almost FDC The legacy of Irene on Byzantine coinage began in 780, when she assumed the regency for her son, Constantine VI, and ended with her removal from the throne in 802. The entire series has been studied by Franz Füeg, who presents a convincing arrangement in his Corpus of the Nomismata from Anastasius II to John I in Constantinople, 713-976. Füeg suggests she did not appear on the initial type of 780-787, which shows on its obverse her son seated beside his deceased father, Leo IV, and on its reverse the young emperor's deceased grandfather and great-grandfather. The type makes sense for such a young emperor, who still had not reached the age of majority, for it stresses his dynastic qualifications. What followed from 787 to 793 is a series that demonstrates a significant rise in the profile of Irene, for she is portrayed beside her son. The other side is dedicated to Constantine VI's deceased father, grandfather and great-grandfather, all three of whom are shown seated. In the next series, which Füeg places from 793 to 797, the ancestors are shed and the coins are devoted wholly to mother and son. While Constantine VI is portrayed on the reverse, Irene occupies the obverse. Her facing bust is topped with a crown that chroniclers of the 10th Century call a 'modiolos'; the iconic spikes that radiate from her diadem may, in fact, be stylized flowers or palm fronds. The last phase of Irene's coinage was struck from 797 to 802, after the poor character of Constantine VI had made it possible for his mother to have him deposed and blinded. With that remarkable event, the throne of Constantinople was now occupied solely by Irene, making her the first woman to rule in her own right. Her reign did not long endure, though. After manifold problems she fell victim to a palace coup and was sent into exile, dying not long afterward. These final solidi are extraordinary in that Irene's portrait appears twice. It is hard to imagine what prompted the idea of occupying both sides with the same design. Both portraits and inscriptions are absolutely identical except for the inconsequential detail that the reverse inscription is followed by a control mark. Memories of the rebellion remained strong with Constantine V, presumably
