SC 311.2 "Antiochos was the son of Iskender's Macedonian commander Seleukos I Nikator and persian prencess Apama. Considering that his father and mother got married in 324 BC within the framework of Alexander's policy of integrating the Macedonians and Persians, the idea that his birth was right after this date comes to the fore. In 294 BC, while his father was still alive, he married his stepmother, Stratonice (nicknamed the Syrian). Historical sources explain this different situation by the fact that Seleucus I Nikator, who was now very old, had to marry his wife to his son, fearing that his son would die due to his love for his young wife Stratonice. In 292 BC, he was joint ruler with his father and satrap of the Province of Bactria. He ascended the throne after his father was assassinated in 281 BC. After plundering the Balkans, the Gauls led by Brennus also ravaged Macedonia and Thrace in 279 BC. A group that separated from them and was later called the Galatians besieged Byzantium, and the Byzantines got rid of this threat by carrying them to Anatolia. After moving to Anatolia, the Galatians continued their plunder and began to establish good relations with Bithynia. Antiochus, who was trying to restore order in Anatolia, saw this situation as a threat to himself and went on an expedition against the Galatians. In 275 BC, with his army supported by war elephants, he inflicted a heavy defeat on them in the conflict called the Battle of the Elephants near Taurus. The Ionian city-states that Antiochus had spared from the Gauls' ravages hailed him as a god and named him Soter ("Saviour"). This superb coin was struck with extraordinary beauty and detail by an marvelous master grow up in Izmir, one of the most important Ionian cities of ancient times. Antiochos had to be at least 45 years old when this coin was minted. However, when we look at the portrait of Antiochos on this coin, it is printed in a way that worth of the name his youngfull, elegant, 'soter' title, contrary to his age. The observe and reverse are struck from two different known dies. which makes this magnificent coin unique
