100 Lycia, Uncertain dynast, circa 520-460 Reverse die punch circa 520-460, Æ 18.00 mm., 5.74 g. Blank. Rev. A plain triskeles within a square punch or die surrounded by a square line with a 'toothed' or ladder motif. For cf., SNG von Aulock 4057. BMC 34-35 var. An Interesting issue, only few authentic dies known. In exceptional condition and Good Extremely fine During the archaic period coins were often struck in a two staged process. Firstly the planchet was placed into the obverse die and a plain die was used to strike the coin which became fixed in the obverse. Then a second strike would be made using a punch as the present example to imprint the reverse type. The rest of the reverse field would be left untouched, however sometimes double striking or other signs of this process would manifest themselves on the reverse as well as die shift on the obverse. The question then presents itself whether these dies are official or those made by ancient forgers. The answer seems to be that the bulk of the dies which have come down to us from antiquity are those used in the production of forgeries. In this case however, we might be dealing with the product of an official mint given the precision of the work. There seems to be a fault on one edge which might suggest that this die was possibly discarded during the manufacturing process. In any case this unique survivor merits further study and shines a fascinating light on the techniques of coin production during the archaic period of Greek coinage.

M·AGRIPPA·COS / DESIG. Babelon Julia 129 and Vipsania 2. C 5. Sydenham 1330. Sear Imperators 306. Crawford 534/2. Very rare. Old cabinet tone, Very Fine. Ex Naville sale 63, 441. Few great leaders in history have had an ally as capable and reliable as Marcus Agrippa (a close second in Roman history is Diocletian's colleague Maximian). In many respects, Agrippa was the brick-and-mortar of Octavian-Augustus' career: not only did he help build it, but he was perpetually relied upon to maintain it, even to the point of creating potential heirs to Augustus' throne through his marriage to Augustus' daughter Julia. On this denarius, struck at a mint moving with Octavian in 38 B.C., the obverse honours Octavian (in the portrait) and the deified father Julius Caesar (in the portrait and in the inscription), while the reverse is entirely devoted to Agrippa. Except for the copper asses struck in Agrippa's name long after his death, and certain provincial coinages (such as the massive issues of Nemausus), there were only two occasions in which Imperial coins were struck for Agrippa. This denarius belongs to the first issue in which three types were struck. Each has the common feature of Agrippa's inscription on the reverse, and their obverses differ in that Julius Caesar is portrayed on the aureus and the head of Octavian or the confronted heads of Caesar and Octavian appear on the denarii.

Very fine Both historians and citizens openly criticised Vespasian - the son of a man who made a fortune as a tax collector in Asia, and later as a banker in Helvetia - for his stinginess, but this proved to be an essential quality for an emperor in his troubled times. Suetonius (Vesp 16.3) reports that Vespasian claimed he needed 400 million aurei (10 billion denarii) to "...put the country back on its feet again". As a result of his close attention to finance, Vespasian struck aurei in large quantities, and unlike most of his predecessors, he employed a wide variety of reverse types. For generations researchers have recognised that many of Vespasian's reverse types recall types from earlier reigns, most especially those from the age of Augustus. Attempts have been made to connect his 'Augustan' types with the centenaries of the Battle of Actium (ending in 70) and the 'foundation' of the empire (ending in 74), but all seem to have failed, as the relevant types are strewn throughout Vespasian's ten-year reign. It is perhaps better to view his recycling of types as a political strategy favoured by Vespasian and Titus, but subsequently abandoned by Domitian

Submitted for consideration as Treasure and recorded by the British Museum. A selection was acquired by the Museum of Somerset. PAS ID: GLO-574C93. Compton Dundon Hoard of Late Roman Coins. In 2017 an important hoard of Roman coins was found in the village of Compton Dundon in Somerset, the exact location has been kept secret, but the hoard is known as "The Compton Dundon Hoard". The hoard consisted of 564 base metal coins of the denomination "Nummus", previously termed "Centenionalis". Importantly a large part of the hoard consisted of coins of the usurper Emperor Magnentius and his brother Decentius (AD 350-53). The hoard was recorded as GLO-574C93 and declared as treasure and a selection was acquired by the Museum of Somerset after being recorded and partially cleaned by the British Museum. The Christogram coins of the usurper Emperors are one of the most demonstrative of the Christian faith within Roman coinage. This the hoard (lot 1 - 34) is offered for sale in its "Museum cleaned condition" ready to be finally conserved and improved. CD references are those used by the British Museum in the identification listing.
