The impressive Samian silver coinage gives testimony to the wealth of the island in Classical time. A first-rate naval power, Samos reportedly contributed no less than sixty warships to the disastrous Battle of Lade in 494 BC, making it the fourth largest contributor after Chios, Miletos, and Lesbos. In the Battle of Salamis in 480 BC, the Samians fought on the side of their new Persian overlords, but they switched sides prior to the Battle of Mykale in 479 BC, placing them, for once, on the winning side of a war. By the time our coin was struck, however, the Athenian Empire lay in ruins and Samos came under Spartan influence, until it was returned to Persian control in 387 BC, only to be sacked and turned into an Athenian cleruchy after an 11-month siege of the eponymous capital of the island by the Athenian general, Timotheos, in 366/5 BC.

Rev: 'Year one of the redemption of Israel' (Paleo-Hebrew), vine leaf on tendril. Hendin 1378. The vine leaf reverse of this middle bronze denomination of the first year of the Bar Kokhba War takes its inspiration from the prutot of the earlier failed Jewish Revolt (66-73 CE) that employed a similar type. In this way the Bar Kokhba War was presented as a continuation of the earlier fight and lent it legitimacy in historical terms. The palm tree was a symbol of Judaea going back at least to the time of the Jewish Revolt since it regularly appears on Roman coins in conjunction with Jewish captives under Vespasian and his successors. The seven branches consciously recall the seven arms of the menorah, perhaps the Jewish symbol par excellence. The palm tree was also prominent on coins of the Galileean city of Sepphoris, which became an important center of rabbinical Judaism after the Bar Kokhba War. Condition: Very fine. Weight: 8.78 g.
