1602 Unidentified Byzantine Pb seal (9.66g, 25mm) Theodoros Chetames (Thoros, son of Hetoum) kouropalates - Very rare! Probably an undescribed variant of the seal Obv: St Theodore standing, holding a spear and shield. Inscription preserved at right: [ὁ ἄ(γιο)ς Θε]όδωρο(ς). Rev: Inscription of five lines: Κ(ύρι)ε β(οή)θ(ει) [Θ]εοδώρω (κ)ουροπα(λάτη) το Χετ(άμη)θ. The Armenian Theodoros Chetames is mentioned in Eastern sources as the first commander of Metilene, who was installed in 1074 by Philaretos Brachamios amidst the chaos in the aftermath of the Battle of Manzikert. Two decades later, in 1094/95, he was appointed commander of Edessa by the Seljuks, but proceeded to gain control of the city for himself. He was murdered in Edessa in 1098 when the First Crusade had arrived, and was succeeded by Baldwin of Boulogne, the later king of Jerusalem. The present seal expresses Theodoros' connection to both the Islamic overlord (as 'emir') as well as the Byzantine emperor (as 'kouropalates'), and is therefore of particular historical interest. About Theodor Chetames (Toros son of Hethum), kuropalates - Matthew of Edessa in the Chronicle: "Ridvan (R'atuan), who was the son of Tutush, along with Yaghi-Siyan and all the other refugees came to the city of Edessa. Kuropalata T'oros, who was in Edessa and was an eloquent and very able man, received them [although] he wanted to arrest them so that he could seize the citadel of Edessa. However, the other princes did not think it wise, so [the fugitives] went quietly, each to his own city. Then Kuropalata T'oros tried many tricks to take over the city and save the faithful from the aliens. He started building walls in front of the citadel and they fortified the walls in one part of the city since the citadel was outside the walls. There were Turkish guards there and a brigade of Armenian troops placed there by Tutush [g249]. When the military commander (aspasalar) residing in the fortress of Maniakesa saw that the Kuropalata had fortified the city and isolated the citadel from the city, he wrote a letter notifying the nearby emirs of what Kuropalata T'orosa had done. He said that "from the sea gate to [the church of] St. Theodora surrounded the city with a wall, built 25 towers, occupied the inner citadel and ruled the entire city of Edessa." In the year 544 of the Armenian era [AD. 1095], Suqman, son of Artuq, and the emir of Samosata, Baldux, son of Amir-Ghazi, raised cavalry and came against Edessa at harvest time. Kuropalata T'oros, the ruler of Edessa, who was full of all wisdom, began to fortify the city on all sides. [The attackers] raised catapults and other [siege] engines and mercilessly pounded the city walls. The Turks stayed there for Κύριε βοήθει τῷ σῷ δούλ(ω) Στεφάν(ω) βασιλικῶ) σπαθαροκανδιδάτ(ω) καὶ τοποτηρητῆ) τοῦ βασιλικοῦ) πλοήμου. = Lord, help your servant Stephanos, imperial spatharokandidatos and topoteretes of the imperial navy. The title was created as a portmanteau of the titles spatharios and kandidatos, both of which were types of palace guards in the 4th-6th centuries. The earliest references to the title occur in the History of Sebeos and in a letter by Pope Gregory II to Emperor Leo III the Isaurian (r. 717-741). John B. Bury accepted a creation in the early 7th century, but the title is clearly attested only from the early 9th century on. In the 9th-century lists of precedence (Taktika), the dignity ranks below that of dishypatos and above that of spatharios among the dignities intended for 'bearded men' (i.e. non-eunuchs). Its distinctive insigne (brabeion) was a golden chain (maniakion) worn around the chest. The dignity was not given to eunuchs, for whom the corresponding dignity was that of spatharokoubikoularios. Judging from sigillographic evidence, the dignity was associated mostly with mid-level ranks, such as notarioi and lower judges. In the lists of offices known as the Taktika, the dignity corresponds to specific positions in the lower tier of the senior civil and military hierarchy, such as those of asekreteis (senior secretary), kleisourarches (commander of a frontier district), topoteretes (deputy commander) of a tagma, or tourmarches (divisional commander) of a thema. The last attested mention of the title is in 1094, and it was dropped from use at the latest in the 12th century. Topoteretes (Greek: τοποτηρητής, translit. topotērētēs) was a Byzantine technical term, meaning deputy or lieutenant (lit. 'place-warden'). As such, it was used in different ways throughout the Empire's history. In the 9th-11th centuries, the topoteretes was the deputy of senior military commanders of the themata, the tagmata and the Byzantine navy. The topoteretes was usually placed in command of one half of the respective unit. In the early 12th century, topoteretai are found as commanders of small regions and fortresses, while in the late Palaiologan period, the term was used for representatives of the Patriarch of Constantinople in sees that

Only 7% of all preserved Byzantine seals were issued by women. Patrikios (πατρικίος) - "patrician", the highest honorary title established by Constantine the Great, slightly devalued by Justinian I, because the emperor allowed it for everyone above the rank of illustis, i.e. the majority of the Senate. It is still one of the highest honors awarded to high-ranking officials, including eunuchs and foreign rulers; the title disappears in the Komnenian period. The patrician's wife had the title of patrikia (πατρικία).
