242 Livonia (Swedish) 1 Solidus 1660 KM-21, N# 41643; Copper; Imitating Christina; Suceava counterfeit; Date read as 166(0); The exact lettering of the surrounding legend may vary. In 1662, under the reign of Eustratie Dabija (1661-1665), the Suceava mint was re-opened in Moldavia (modern-day Romania). With the help of mintmaster Tito Livio Burattini, the mint struck many counterfeits of Livonian solidus pieces. Some say these counterfeits were used as a way to ruin the Livonian economy; others say they were struck to help Moldavia get out of its financial crisis. Either way, these counterfeits were continually produced even after Eustratie Dabija's death, spanning over the reigns of George Ducas (1665-1666), Iliăş Alexandru (1666-1668), and the second reign of George Ducas (1668-1672) as well. These coins differ from the original pieces in a few ways: they appear much more coppery (either made of copper or very low-quality billon, depending on the source), they typically (but not always) have fictitious dates, and they are often much cruder than the originals. Even so, these forgeries are still very collectable, and are usually worth more than the real pieces.; XF

681 Philippines Bank J.M Tuason & Co Manila Bill of Exchange for £30-10-2 1878 S/N 11691; Scarce Second of Exchange drawn in Manila on Union Bank of London by Jose Maria Tuason & Compania. Don Jose Maria Tuason, one of the most prominent merchants, bankers, and real estate magnates of mid-19th century, established J.M. Tuason & Co., one of the earliest Filipino-owned merchant firms of the time. In addition to trading, the firm also opened a banking house in the 1860s, receiving deposits, as well as issuing bills on London and Madrid, as well as discounting commercial paper. In addition, Don Jose Maria Tuason was nominated as the first manager (gerente) of the Banco Español-Filipino de Isabel II (1853-1856), precursor of the Bank of the Philippine Islands. The Tuasons are descended from an intermix of Chinese, Spanish and Filipino families. The great patriarch of the Tuasons was a Chinese immigrant from Fukien, Son Tua who settled in Binondo, Manila in the early 18th century. He came to Manila to engage in the galleon trade. Quickly amassing wealth because of his business acumen, he became possibly the richest man in the Philippines by the second half of the 18th century.; UNC
