73 CAPPADOCIA EUSEBEIA (CAESAREA) Bronze, 36 - 17 (autonomous during the reign of Archelaus?). Horse head with star, pearl circle. Rs: Palm branch with Taenia and 12-pointed star. SNG BM 984, SNG Stancomb 653. Excellent. Iconographic and stylistic argumentation connects that coin to the preceding pieces (the reverse does not show a comet but rather a palm branch with taenia combined with a star - see Rauch Auction 95/Lot 104, annotation). The illustration of two stars, a head of a horse and a palm branch on one coin lets the beholder think of the Dioscouri. That cult seems not to be unknown in Eusebia and evidence comes from the numismatic sector. Another coin with the legend "EYSEBEIAS" is registered in Sydenham (Caesarea, No. 18) and shows, flanking a palm branch, the two, star topped, caps of the Dioscouri. It is not fallacious that the image of these Cappadocian coins is influenced by the area of Pontus. Iconographic and stylistic argumentation connects that coin to the preceding pieces (the reverse does not show a comet but rather a palm branch with taenia combined with a star - see Rauch Auction 95/Lot 104, annotation). The illustration of two stars, a head of a horse and a palm branch on one coin lets the beholder think of the Dioscouri. 86 Greek CILICIA, Uncertain. 343-332 BC. AR Obol . King of Persia (Artaxerxes III?) seated right on throne with back terminating in griffin's head, wearing double crown, holding a lotus flower and [lotus-tipped scepter] / Youthful male head (Artaxerxes IV?) left, wearing earring and double crown. Göktürk 35 (Myriandros); SNG BN 429 (Myriandros); SNG Levante – Good very fine. Although this issue has long been known, it was only in 2000 that the types were properly interpreted (F. L. Kovacs, "Two Persian Pharaonic Portraits," JNG L [2000], pp. 55-60). Kovacs argues that the crown being worn by both the figure on the obverse and reverse is none other than the atef crown of the Pharaohs, a composite headdress signifying their rule over Upper and Lower Egypt. Logically, this coin would have to date to the Thirty-First Dynasty, when Egypt was ruled by the Achaemenids following the overthrow of Nektanebo II, the last native pharaoh of Egypt. Kovacs suggests the figure on the obverse is Artaxerxes III Ochus, and that on the reverse is Artaxerxes IV Arses. The issue may have been struck to commemorate Artaxerxes IV's elevation to crown prince (circa 343-338 BC) or on his succession (336 BC). Weight:0,5 gr Diameter:11,7 mm
