659 A Roman glass relief depicting the goddess of victory (Victoria) in a scene of deep symbolism, an example of the art and depiction of symbolic and religious concepts in the Roman Empire. Details in this relief include: 1. The first goddess of victory holding a branch: The branch, often an olive or laurel branch, is a symbol of peace and victory. The depiction of Victoria holding the branch signifies the achievement of victory and the restoration of peace after conflict, which was considered a blessing from the gods to the Romans. 2. The second goddess of victory holding a mythical animal (griffin): The griffin, a mythical creature that is half eagle and half lion, was a dual symbol of heavenly power (eagle) and earthly power (lion). Victoria holding the griffin highlights her role in taming this mythical power, reflecting the control and order that comes with victory. Symbolic message: Duality of victory: The appearance of the two goddesses of victory together symbolizes the dual power that unites earthly (military) and heavenly (divine) victory. Balance between power and peace: The branch represents peace, and the two griffins represent power. The inscription celebrates the achievement of victory while maintaining order and peace. In honor of a ruler or leader: The inscription may have been intended to honor a Roman emperor or leader associated with victory. Use: Such motifs were common on luxury glassware, used in celebrations or given as tokens of victory and appreciation. (26 mm, 4.44 g).

660 Byzantine Byzantine Glass Solidus Weight (24 mm, 4.44 g). Circa 5th-6th century AD. Bust facing forward, showing a human face in fine detail. A crown on the head, signifying the person's importance or a symbol of royalty. There are inscriptions or writings surrounding the head, made of green glass, a symbolic material reflecting rarity and beauty. These weights are evidence of the level of precision that ancient man achieved in measuring. The artistic design shows the spirit of the age.

200

899 This bronze hand appears to be a distinctive Roman artifact, perhaps used as a symbol or as part of a larger statue. The design of the hand suggests that it is extended in a way that signifies interest or giving, with the four fingers clenched together and the thumb left out, giving an impression of strength and balance. The carved detailing of the hand joint, which has a beautiful arched shape, gives the piece a wonderful artistic character that reflects the Roman skill in depicting human organs with precision and beauty. It is likely that this hand was part of a religious or social ritual, or perhaps it had a special symbolic association in ancient Roman culture.. (5.9 cm, 53.05 g)

100

900 This bronze statue of a horse standing on a bronze base is a distinctive piece of art that highlights the aesthetics of strength and grace that horses are known for. The horse is designed with meticulous detailing that reflects the artist's skill, showing the horse standing in a position that suggests movement and readiness. The horse's raising of its left leg in particular may symbolize a certain meaning, perhaps related to victory or progress, which was common in ancient artistic symbolism. The good condition of the statue indicates that it was carefully protected, which adds to its artistic and historical value. This statue may have been part of a group of statues that commemorate chivalry or royal power, or it may have a traditional association with symbols of courage and prestige..(5.4 cm, 94.71 g)
