The depiction of Heracles on Perinthos coins, with the inscription ΙΩΝΩΝ ΚΤΙCΤΗΝ ("The Ionian Founder"), highlights the city's claim to Ionian heritage and links its foundation to both myth and history. By presenting Heracles as the city's founder, Perinthos draws on a common Roman motif of associating cities with divine heroes. The inscription emphasizes its Ionian origins, reinforcing the city's identity and pride. This dual approach blends the mythological figure of Heracles with the historical Ionian connection, showcasing how Perinthos used coinage to celebrate its past and strengthen its civic identity in the Roman world.

Hector, the eldest son of Troy's King Priam and Queen Hecuba, is the first national hero of Anatolia. It is a symbol not only of the city of Ilium, also for all of the people of Anatolia. Homer compares Hector with Ares in terms of his fighting skills. Because Hector's role in the war is quite big and important. He had to lead the armies and inspire trust. The decision, responsibility and obligation are in his responsibility. During the war, he was killed by Achilles outside the walls of the city of Ilium in front of his wife and family. Athena, on the other hand, has been of great importance to the city of Ilium since its founding and is associated with the city's founding mythology. His depiction of these two important figures of the city in the Roman Empire must be a sign of Romans respect and devotion to his roots.

The attribution of a specific Julio-Claudian prince to each of these portraits remains a matter of conjecture. Mionnet believed them to be portraits of Gaius and Lucius Caesars, an interpretation the authors of RPC believed quite plausible. They do note, however, that the index to the von Aulock collection interprets this issue both as Gaius and Lucius, and Drusus and Germanicus, all of whom became potential heirs to the imperial throne. Barring any more conclusive evidence, the matter will remain unresolved.

Rev: ΑΝ ΟΚΤΑ. Confronted draped busts of Antonia and Claudia Octavia. Ref: RPC I 2248. Fine. Britannicus was born Tiberius Claudius Germanicus on February 12, AD 41, only a few weeks after his father became the emperor Claudius. His name was changed to Tiberius Claudius Caesar Britannicus after the Roman conquest of Britain in AD 43. In the ancient sources he is most often simply Britannicus. He was the second child and only son of Claudius and his third wife Valeria Messalina. Their first child had been a daughter, Octavia, older by a few years. Another daughter, Antonia, had been born to Claudius and a previous wife; two other children were long dead. Valeria Messalina, while still wife of Claudius, married Gaius Silius, who was forced to adopt Britannicus as his son. Silius was the consul designatus for 49 AD. The bigamous relationship was discovered, as were their plans to overthrow Claudius, declare Britannicus emperor and jointly rule the empire. Messalina and Silius were executed while Britannicus was 7 years old. Britannicus was poisoned by Nero on 11 February 55 CE during the feast in front of all guests by the poisoner Locusta (Locusta of Gaul: The Imperial Poisoner of Ancient Rome), on the day before his fourteenth birthday, when he was about to put on a man's toga. Britannicus was served with poisoned water in a vase. When the boy fell dead on the dining table, Nero alerted the guests that his adopted brother had an epileptic attack and that they would better focus on food. A party attended by one of his best friends, Titus, who also ended up drinking some of the poison, but recovered after a long illness. Titus would eventually go on to become emperor and issue coins and erect a status to honor Britannicus.

Similar lead sling bullets, often featuring alternating symbols like a bee and scorpion, typically bear the inscription Κάλα, believed to originate from Rhodes. The word Κάλα could refer to a name—likely Kalas, a military commander—or the neuter plural καλά, meaning "nice things." The irony is clear: these "nice things" are designed to harm, much like the sting of a bee or scorpion. Therefore, the message on bullets with a bee symbol might be interpreted as: "nice things sting like a bee." (See M. Manov & N. Torbov, 2016, Inscribed Lead Sling Bullets with the Name of Alexander the Great and Other Names and Symbols Found in Thrace, Archaeologia Bulgarica 20, 32.) Weight: 34.43 g. Diameter: 31.05 mm.
