Sold with collector's ticket. Babelon wrongly calls his no. 423 a trihemiobol. He was led astray by the mistake in the recording of the weight, but he should have also realized that an obol and a trihemiobol could not possibly have exactly the same types. The coin resides in the Fonds Generales of the Paris collection under the serial number 101 and has recently been re-weighed by a good friend who was visiting Paris. It actually weighs 0.59 g. and not 1.59 g. See also Imhoof-Blumer in NC 1895, p. 270, 3 and pl. X, 2 for the whereabouts of the five such obols known to him at the time as well as the photo of the one in his collection.

Sold with collector's ticket. It is always nice to be able to date coins practically to the very year they were struck. And in this case, interesting to compare the style of this coin with the previous. The head of the bull is more triangular now and the eyes more bulging, as if the artist wanted to convey the aggressiveness that now permeates the actions of Onymarchos and his followers. For the reverse, surely a well-known artist was commissioned, someone who would do justice to the name of a strathgoV autokratwr (see Williams p. 47). After all, this must have been a special occasion; up to that time it had not been the usual practice to strike coins with full personal names on them, at least not in this part of the world.

125 Phocis, Federal coinage Bronze under Phalaikos, 351 BC, Æ 12.20 mm., 1.68 g. Head and neck of Athena helmeted facing $\frac{3}{4}$ l. Rev. Φ in laurel wreath with berries. SNG Cop 114. BCD 332.1 Nice style, attractive dark green patina, Very Fine. From the duplicates of the BCD collection. Sold with collector's ticket. In this catalogue the delicately engraved and finely styled smaller sized Athena head bronzes are attributed to Phalaikos. Although this appears to be rather arbitrary, the reader is reminded that Williams (p. 68) considers the Apollo heads on the reverse of his silver to be "in superb style". Could it then be that the same artist was called upon to engrave some of the dies for the Athena obverse bronzes?

From the Dr. Briggs Brailar collection. For his Fifth Labor, Hercules was to muck out the stables of Augeas, king of Elis, in a single day. Eurystheus hoped that by doing this, the dirtiest of all the Labors, Hercules would be demeaned and, as the stables had never been cleaned, the completion of the task would be impossible. Hercules succeeded, however, by rerouting the rivers Alpheus and Peneus to wash out the filth. Augeas became irate because he had promised Hercules one-tenth of his cattle if the job was finished in one day. The king refused to honor the agreement and Hercules slew him as a result. He installed in his place Augeas' son, Phyleus, as the boy had supported the hero.

From the CR collection and from the Dr. Briggs Brailar collection. When Herakles came to Tegea in Arcadia he seduced Auge, not knowing that she was King Aleus' daughter. From this union a boy was born who was secretly hidden by Auge in the precinct of Athena. But Aleus, some say, discovered his daughter's motherhood when he, on account of a pestilence that was ravaging the country, visited the temple of Athena. He then took the infant and exposed it on Mount Parthenius, but it survived, being nourished by a doe that had just cast her fawn. Soon shepherds appeared who took up the infant and named him Telephos. His myth and the stories of his adventures in the Trojan War were fostered by the Attalid rulers of Pergamon in Mysia.

Very rare, Graded F strike: 4/5, Surface: 2/5 - Encapsulated NGC 4201987-002. From the Gorringer collection 1879 and from the Dr. Briggs Brailar collection. As the struggle between Marc Antony and Octavian dragged on in the 30s B.C., the geographical and political lines became ever more defined. Antony had become entrenched in the Eastern Mediterranean, and in doing so had allied himself with Cleopatra VII, queen of Egypt, whose original supporter in Rome, Julius Caesar, had been murdered years before. She had his son, Caesarion, at her side, but she needed an ally like Antony if she hoped to preserve Egypt from the ever-widening grasp of Rome. Importantly, Antony was easier to manipulate than Octavian, who had no sympathy for Cleopatra's motives. Although this woman of blinding intellect may have found her marriage to Antony a degrading experience, personally, she was crafty enough to realise it was her only chance at survival. Hence, she was probably eager to issue dual-portrait coins, such as the denarius offered here. Little more indication is necessary to recognise that Cleopatra had effectively dominated her husband, the Roman warlord Antony.

The crossed-cornucopias design is familiar on ancient coinage, and here the cornucopias, grape clusters, grape leaves and pine cones seemingly allude to Bacchus or Liber in a reference to fecundity. In terms of dynastic appeal, the design boasts of the prosperity and fruitfulness of the Tiberian line, with the caduceus symbolizing Mercury as the messenger of the gods and the bringer of good fortune. Despite the hopefulness represented by this series of coins, tragedy struck on two fronts. The 'Tiberian dynasty' collapsed within months of its being announced when both Drusus and his son Germanicus Gemellus (the boy whose head is shown on the right cornucopia) died in 23. Poor fates awaited the remaining two members: Drusus' wife Livilla became increasingly associated with Tiberius' prefect Sejanus, and she died shamefully in the aftermath of his downfall in 31, and the second grandson, Tiberius Gemellus, survived long enough to be named co-heir of Tiberius with Caligula, but after Tiberius' death he was pushed into a subsidiary role and soon was executed by Caligula, who would not tolerate a second heir to the throne.

579 Commodus, 177-192 Sestertius Rome 181, Æ 30.00 mm., 26.77 g. Laureate head r. Rev. Commodus seated l. on curule chair set on daïs; attendant standing behind him; before him, Liberalitas stands l., holding tessera and cornucopia; citizen on l. mounting steps toward platform. C 310. RIC 310. Rare. Brown tone and Very Fine. Ex NAC sale P, 2005, 2090. Much like Hadrian reversed the expansionist policies of his predecessor Trajan, so did Commodus, who did not want to pursue his father's plan of forcing the empire's border to the Carpathian mountains by establishing the provinces of Marcomannia and Sarmatia north of the Danube. Instead, not long after Marcus Aurelius died in March, 180, Commodus abandoned the newly annexed territories, patched up a reasonable peace with the northern tribes, and returned to Rome to hold a triumph late in October of that year. With his triumph and accession as sole-emperor, Commodus made a largesse; it was his third, for he had made two during his father's reign. The distribution marked by this sestertius of 181 is his fourth (LIB AVG IIII), and he would make a fifth within a year. The issuance of three largesses in less than about 18 months suggests Commodus was concerned about shoring up his popularity among the people and the army. The reverse type on this sestertius shows the emperor seated upon a platform, accompanied by an officer (perhaps the prefect of the praetorium) and Liberalitas, who holds a cornucopia and a board for counting coins. Below, a citizen is shown on the steps leading up to the platform, his outstretched toga already laden with coins from the largesse.
