141 SICILY, Entella. Punic issues. Circa 320/15-300 BC. AR Tetradrachm . Head of Arethusa left, wearing wreath of grain ears, triple-pendant earring, and pearl necklace; four dolphins around / Horse prancing left; palm tree in. In the final decade of the fifth century BC, the Carthaginians launched a series of invasions of Sicily, conquering much of the western half of the island and bringing devastation to many formerly flourishing Greek communities. The Punic presence lasted for a century and a half, until Rome's victory in the First Punic War obliged the Carthaginians to withdraw. During their time of occupation, the Carthaginians struck an extensive coinage in Sicily for the purpose of financing their military operations and the maintenance of garrisons. The obverse and reverse types of the series are mostly influenced by Sicilian prototypes, particularly those of Syracuse, except for the later series with the head of Herakles on the obverse which was obviously influenced by the well-recognized coinage of Alexander the Great. While a few of the series are struck at cities with established mints, such as Motya and Panormos, these are often viewed as minor or campaign mints that operated for a short duration. The location of the primary Punic mint (or mints) on Sicily, responsible for the large issues studied by G.K. Jenkins ('Carthage' series I-V), has been the subject of great debate. Most recently I. Lee surveyed the existing literature and took a fresh look at the full spectrum of evidence, persuasively concluding that this mint was located at Entella ("Entella: The Silver Coinage of the Campanian Mercenaries and the First Carthaginian Mint 410-409 BC" in NC 160 [2000], pp. 1-66). 16,95 g - 24,28 mm

The engraver responsible for the dies used to strike this coin was an artist of great talent. The obverse is so close to those of the contemporary tetradrachms of Akanthos that either he saw them, and carefully copied them, or, could it be?, was responsible for them too! The idea that really talented engravers travelled and offered their services to other mints is more than reasonable.

Von Aulock, Phrygiens I 851-3. Mên was a Phrygian lunar deity with roots in both Mesopotamian and Zoroastrian religion. In central and western Asia Minor he was often worshiped in association with the goddess Anahita. He was especially revered by the Roman legions stationed in the region; at Antiochia in Pisidia for instance, which was a Roman colony with legionnaires stationed nearby, there was a large temple complex to Mên Askaenos. The inscriptions in the temple all date to the colonial period, and suggest his cult was highly regarded by the Roman soldiers in the area similar to that of the god Mithras, who also had lunar elements to his worship. 4,93 g - 19,60 mm

533 The Pompeians. Sextus Pompey. 42-38 BC. Æ As Uncertain Sicilian mint. Laureate janiform head of Pompey the Great; (MA) GN above / Prow of galley right, galley decorated with star and eye on side; PIVS above; IMP in exergue. After the defeat of his father and brother by Julius Caesar, Sextus Pompey set up shop in Sicily and carried on as a pirate king, raiding Roman commerce and making a nuisance of himself to Octavian, Caesar's successor as ruler of Italy. Repeated attempts by Octavian to corral Sextus failed ignominiously, once nearly costing Octavian his life. In 39 BC, Sextus entered into a power-sharing agreement with Octavian and his fellow Triumvirs, Mark Antony and Lepidus. But he continued to serve as a magnet for Senatorial resistance and disaffection, so Octavian renewed hostilities the following year. The brilliant admiral Agrippa finally defeated Sextus at Naulochos in 36 BC, but he escaped, fleeing to Antony, who kept him alive as a bargaining chip for awhile, then executed him. The as coinage in the name of Pompey the Great is catalogued sequentially by Martini according to the obverse bust. First a traditional head of Janus, then a janiform head of Pompey the Great, followed by successive series of "mature" and "juvenile" imitative portraits.

Bland, 'The Coinage of Jotapian: A Reassessment' in NC 2022, 8/12 Extremely Fine, Extremely Rare; and undoubtedly among the very finest known coins of the usurper. Jotapian, a member of the near-eastern indigenous aristocracy who claimed descent from an Alexander (possibly either Severus Alexander, or Antiochos I of Commagene, who himself claimed Alexander the Great as an ancestor), led a rebellion against Philip I centred around Syria in response to an increase in taxation ordered by the rector orientis Priscus, Philip's brother. Jotapian made Antioch his capital, but the rebellion quickly came to an end when Jotapian was killed by his own soldiers.

899 Byzantine Seal Konon (the future emperor Leo III), tourmarches, first quarter of the 8th century +KO/Nω/NOC, +TOVP/MAP/XOV This seal and a closely related type belonging to the same individual—bearing the rank of patrikios (see Zacos/Veglery 899, Seibt, BBÖ 1, 135; Berlin I 169, similarly depicting cypress trees)—can be reasonably attributed to the same person, identified as the future emperor Leo III, originally named Konon. Leo-Konon had a distinguished military trajectory, eventually serving as strategos of the Anatolikon thema prior to his elevation to the imperial throne. The seal reflecting his rank of patrikios most likely corresponds to this later stage, fitting the status of a strategos, who commanded an entire thema. In contrast, our seal, indicating the earlier rank of tourmarches, should precede this period, since a thema typically comprised four tourmai, each commanded by a tourmarches subordinate to the strategos. Although historical sources do not explicitly mention Leo serving as tourmarches, such a rank represents a logical and expected stage in the progression of his military career 10,53 g - 22,35 mm

903 Byzantine Seal Basilides of Alexandria and the Figure of Abrasax EGYPT. Uncertain. Gnostic Tessera, ca.2nd-4th century AD. IA, Abrasax depicted frontally, with a rooster's head and serpentine legs, holding a whip in his right hand and a shield in his left. ABPA/CAΞ, with a star-in-crescent above. Comparable examples include Elsen 124 (2015), 404 and Rauch MBS 8 (2004), 685. An exceptionally rare piece of immense historical significance. The ancient figure of Abrasax (or Abraxas) gained widespread recognition during the Roman era, largely due to the teachings of the Christian Gnostic Basilides of Alexandria (circa 85-145 AD). Basilides regarded Abrasax as the 'great archon' and the foremost of the 365 Gnostic Aeons. While the origin of the name remains uncertain, one theory suggests a derivation from the Egyptian words abrak and sax, meaning "the honorable and sacred word." However, a striking numerological connection exists: in Greek isopsephy, the sum of the letters in ABPAΣΑΞ equals 365, symbolizing the number of days in the solar year (A = 1, B = 2, P = 100, A = 1, Σ = 200, A = 1, Ξ = 60 → 1+2+100+1+200+1+60 = 365). Basilides and his followers proposed radical theological ideas, including the belief that Abrasax sent Christ to the world as a spirit, rather than in human form. These doctrines provoked strong opposition from early Church Fathers such as Hippolytus of Rome, Clement of Alexandria, and Eusebius of Caesarea, who sought to refute Basilidianism as heretical. Though Basilides' teachings were largely confined to Egypt, where an active Gnostic sect thrived between the 2nd and 4th centuries, his influence may still be felt today—perhaps most intriguingly in the well-known incantation 'abracadabra', which some scholars argue stems from the name Abrasax itself. 3,04 g - 19,36 mm
