Weight : 18.70 gr Diameter : 29 mm There were two temple states active in the Hellenistic Period within the borders of today's Tokat/Turkey in the inner parts of the Black Sea Region. The larger of these, Komana, was a Cappadocian type temple dedicated to the Mother Goddess Ma. (Wilson 1960, 228) (Strabo 12.3.34) Komana Temple State also had the status of a polis and was used as a trade center by visitors from the region throughout the year. After the collapse of the weight Kingdom and the flight of Mithradates VI, Komana Temple State became a principality and was transferred to Archelaus by Pompey in the mid-1st century BC. (App.Mithr. 115; Wilson 1960, 228) Archelaus was followed by his son after he was deposed by Caesar in 47 BC. Lykomedes, a Bithynian of Cappadocian origin, took over the principality from Archelaus' son (Bell.Alex. 66.3), and Medeios, Cleon, and Dyteutus, who were appointed by Augustus, served in Comana in that order. (Cass.Dio 51.2.3; Strabo 12.558; 12.574) With the death of Dyteutus, Comana was included in the weight Galaticus Region. By this time, the priests had lost a significant amount of their power, but the temple function continued. During the reign of Maurice Tiberius (582-602 AD), the city was incorporated into the imperial domain. The region had the status of ager publicus for a while between the weight Kings Period and the period encompassing the rule of Emperor Maurice. (RGS Supp.Pap. 1893, 736) Comana's territory expanded during the weight Kings and the Roman Imperial Periods. When the Roman Pompey became a prince, he added 2 schoeni or 60 stades to the city. Thus, the diameter of the city area reached approximately 4 kilometers. (Magie 1950, 371; Wilson 1960, 229) The Roman Emperors Caesar or Antony gave 4 schoeni worth of land to the priests of Comana. (Wilson 1960, 229) These new lands were most probably added to the east, south and west sides of the city. These areas are known as Zelitis and Megalopolitis. It can be assumed that the north side was limited because the cities of Magnopolis and Neocaesareia were very close. It is known that the area of the city expanded even more during the Augustan period and reached the size of the civitates in the region. When Comana was added to the weight Galaticus Region in 34-35 AD.
