Svoronos pl., 2, 5. Lovely old cabinet tone, well struck owl on reverse. Good Very fine Ex Heritage sale 3033, 2014, 23023. Privately purchased in Brussels in October 1992. From the collection of dr. Arthur Ziegler. Graded Ch VF strike:4/5, surface: 3/5, NGC certification number 4165867-001 Coinciding with the fall of the Peisistratid tyranny and the introduction of democracy in ca. 511 BC, the Athenian "owl" tetradrachms were introduced and became an archetype that would last nearly half a millennium. The earliest "owls" display remarkably crude workmanship and poor production standards, surprising given Athens' position as the foremost Greek city in terms of artistic achievement. This present example is actually an outstanding example of this early phase of production, with a well-centered head of Athena and a bold owl, well-struck owl, putting it in the top 5% for Athenian coins of this era.

CPE 390. Minor marks, otherwise Good Very Fine. Ex Oslo Myntagleri sale 6, 2015, 887. From a private Scandinavian collection. The veiled portrait of Arsinoe II, sister-wife of King Ptolemy II, was iconic in the Hellenistic Age. It not only set the standard for the presentation of later Ptolemaic women, but it influenced monarchs who issued coins throughout the Mediterranean world, even into Roman times. After she died in July, 270 B.C., Arsinoe II was promptly deified, and coins mainly of large denominations – usually gold octodrachms and silver decadrachms – were produced in her honour. Remarkably, they continued to be struck under successive Ptolemaic kings for nearly 150 years, by which time the Ptolemies ceased issuing such impressive coins. This particular coin was struck at the provincial mint of Ake-Ptolemais, and is dated to year 35, which Troxell identifies as 251/0 B.C. This portrait shows a noblewoman of impeccable pedigree, the ideal of Greek womanhood. Her status as a queen is attested by the jewelled diadem at her forehead and the sceptre on the far side of her bust, and her divinity is revealed by the ram's horn that curls behind her ear. The diaphanous veil, however, may be the most arresting element of the design, as it envelops her head in high relief and trails downward in a way that provides the image with great dimension. The reverse is devoted wholly to the deified queen. The inscription APΣΙΝΟΗΣ ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΟΥ ([coin] of Arsinoe, brother-lover) demonstrates her sibling relationship with her husband, King Ptolemy II, who issued this octodrachm. Furthermore, the double cornucopia is thought to be the personal badge of Arsinoe II, and it became inseparable with her veiled image, as both appear on the coins issued in her name until the late issues of King Ptolemy VIII, who died in 116 B.C. The veiled portrait of Arsinoe II, sister-wife of King Ptolemy II, was iconic in the Hellenistic Age. It not only set the standard for the presentation of later Ptolemaic women, but it influenced monarchs who issued coins throughout the Mediterranean world, even into Roman times. Crawford 86/6 var. (see note below). Sydenham -. Type not in RBW. McCabe Group F1. Very rare. Dark brown patina, Good Very Fine. Anonymous sextans from H-Q series, Apulia mint. McCabe (Essays Russo, 2013) pp. 149-153 shows that this rare anonymous series, McCabe type F1, is related to both RRC 85 and 86 as well as RRC 97, all from Apulia. The reverse of this sextans includes design elements from the prows of the H and Q series such as the central keel line, which intersects with the upper line halfway across the prow, as well as an engraving style for obverse and reverse that is akin to that used on some L series coinage. There are two sextans designs in this F1 series, that with a regular prow such as this coin and sextantes with a prow having a raised fighting deck with club within such as used on the Luceria coinage. This is a hybrid coin issue that demonstrates the use of shared engravers and shared design elements between the ROMA, V, H, Q, L and L-T issues, although probably involving three different mint locations. The Apulian bronze coinage of this period is explored in Andrew McCabe, "The Roman Bronze Coinage struck in Apulia and South East Italy in the Second Punic War," in Proceedings XV International Numismatic Congress Taormina 2015, forthcoming. Banker's mark and light marks; otherwise About Very Fine Interestingly, this quinarius probably struck at a mint travelling with Octavian in Gaul during the latter part of the year 39 BC, only mentions Octavian on the reverse, and his name takes a subsidiary position to Antony's, which comes first! This is rather surprising and begs the question of why? The reason is probably to be found in the fact that Octavian was purposely adopting a conciliatory attitude in a province that had recently fallen under Mark Antony's control; his generals most likely were still in the area, and Octavian had not yet acquired the authority that the older Antony possessed. The types back up the conciliatory message: Concordia, with her diademed and veiled head on the obverse, manifest as a placatory message saying that the Triumvirs were working in harmony, while the reverse with the two hands together holding a caduceus along with both of the Triumvirs' names reinforces the conciliatory theme of Concordia on the obverse. Sear, in his book on the Roman Imperators makes an interesting observation: he highlights Octavian's political astuteness, noting that while Antony would remain preeminent for sometime longer, Octavian "was employing all his guile to strengthen his position at the expense of" Mark Antony, and that "almost imperceptibly the balance of power began to shift" (Sear Imperators, p. 187).

The praetorian guards played an important role in Roman history up through the third century A.D., after which time the capital became had become somewhat irrelevant to most imperial affairs. Often the praetorians influenced the emperor, and on some occasions they caused a new emperor to be acclaimed or aided in the overthrow of a reigning emperor. One of the most infamous prefects of the guard was Sertorius Macro, who in 31 replaced the murdered Aelius Sejanus. Nearly six years later, when Tiberius died – perhaps with the aid of Macro himself – the prefect navigated the transition of power by offering his support to Caligula, the most promising of Tiberius' co-heirs. Though Macro did not survive long into the reign of Caligula, he perhaps was singlehandedly responsible for the annulment of Tiberius' will and the smooth accession of Caligula that followed. Suetonius describes how after Caligula had gained the support of the guards, the senate unhesitatingly granted him ius arbitriumque omnium rerum, or what amounted to full authority over the state. In this instance the senate handed over to 18-year-old Caligula a broad range of authorities that Augustus had painstakingly assembled over a period of decades. Tiberius' will allocated one thousand sestertii for each praetorian guard, an amount that Caligula doubled upon realizing that his power was based largely in the support of the guard. These funds were paid out promptly at a ceremony that we may presume is commemorated by the adlocutio cohortis sestertii of 37. Some senators were present at the event, no doubt to make an impression. The precedent established by Tiberius and Caligula was dangerous, and four years later Claudius considered it necessary to increase the amount to 15,000 sestertii per guard. The absence of SC (senatus consulto or senatus consultum) from the inscription on this sestertius is of great interest, for there is no reason to believe its exclusion was accidental. The inescapable message to the senate was that the emperor's newfound authority was assured by his relationship with the guard. It is worth noting that two other sestertii of Caligula do not 566 Vespasian, 69-79 Denarius Ephesus circa 74-79, AR 18.00 mm., 3.12 g. (IMP) • (VE)S in rectangular countermark on a denarius of Vespasian from the Ephesus mint (RIC II 1452). Howgego 839. Pangerl 100 . Host VF, c/m VF. Rare undertype. This countermark appears mostly on late Republican and Imperial denarii, although denarii of Augustus and denarii of the Flavians struck at Ephesus are also recorded. The MP VES countermarks circulated specifically within the province of Asia Minor. Martini noted that the output of silver coinage in relation to the civic bronze for this region was much smaller during the Julio-Claudian period. This suggests the denarii were countermarked to validate locally circulating silver coinage at an acceptable weight while the regional mints opened by Vespasian were gearing up production, a theory which the countermarking of cistophori with the contemporary MP VES AVG countermarks seems to support. The similarly countermarked Flavian denarii struck at Ephesus can be accounted for as examples accidentally countermarked by unobservant mint workers during the transition.

Both historians and citizens openly criticised Vespasian - the son of a man who made a fortune as a tax collector in Asia, and later as a banker in Helvetia - for his stinginess, but this proved to be an essential quality for an emperor in his troubled times. Suetonius (Vesp 16.3) reports that Vespasian claimed he needed 400 million aurei (10 billion denarii) to ...put the country back on its feet again. As a result of his close attention to finance, Vespasian struck aurei in large quantities, and unlike most of his predecessors, he employed a wide variety of reverse types. For generations researchers have recognised that many of Vespasian's reverse types recall types from earlier reigns, most especially those from the age of Augustus. Attempts have been made to connect his 'Augustan' types with the centenaries of the Battle of Actium (ending in 70) and the 'foundation' of the empire (ending in 74), but all seem to have failed, as the relevant types are strewn throughout Vespasian's ten-year reign. It is perhaps better to view his recycling of types as a political strategy favoured by Vespasian and Titus, but subsequently abandoned by Domitian"

A superb portrait of fine style, attractive brown-green patina and About Extremely Fine. Ex NAC sale 101, 2017, 200. For someone who died at the relatively early age of 41, Titus accomplished a great amount in a short period. Even from a young age, when he counted Britannicus, the ill-fated son of Claudius, among his best friends, Titus was recognized as having potential. Suetonius (Titus 2) tells us that "...when one day Claudius' freedman Narcissus called in a physiognomist to examine Britannicus' features and prophesy his future, he was told most emphatically that Britannicus would never succeed his father, whereas Titus (who happened to be present) would achieve that distinction". Perhaps his greatest accomplishment was the siege of Jerusalem in the First Jewish Revolt, a remarkable task of engineering genius and perseverance that he orchestrated personally. Upon returning to Rome his contributions to the empire were not quite so spectacular, but were even more valuable. For nearly a decade before he became emperor in 79, Titus was the backbone of his father's administration. When he became emperor his popularity rose, and though he was privileged to dedicate the Colosseum., the also had to deal with the terrible consequences from the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

A lovely portrait, brown tone, minor areas of weakness, otherwise good very fine Ex Lanz 100, 2000, Benz part II, 9 and NAC 84, 2015, 1050 sales. From a private Scandinavian collection. In the confusion that followed the assassination of Pertinax, the man who the senate had hailed emperor after the murder of Commodus, the praetorian guard hosted a scandalous spectacle: an auction at which the right to be emperor was sold to the highest bidder. There was a spirited competition between Flavius Sulpicianus, the father-in-law of the murdered Pertinax, and Didius Julianus, a senator and one of the wealthiest men in Rome. When Julianus pledged an accession bonus of 25,000 sestertii per guard, it was a bid that Sulpicianus could not top. The praetorians led Julianus before the terrified Senate, which had no choice but to ratify the coup d'etat. Many of those living in Rome were appalled by this shameful turn of events and sent messengers to seek help from the commanders in the provinces. Three generals responded. Septimius Severus, being the nearest to Rome, gained the upper hand by arriving in the capital before either of his competitors. The praetorians were no match for the battle-hardened soldiers who had accompanied Severus, and they quickly decided in favor of Severus. Didius Julianus was not so fortunate, as he was captured at the beginning of June and was beheaded in the manner of a common criminal.

CONSECRATIO Eagle standing facing, head l., with spread wings; in exergue, KAA. C 2. Hunter 1. RIC Numerian 472. Rare and unusually nice for this issue; portrait of lovely style, delicate green patina and Extremely Fine. Ex NAC sale 27, 2004, 492. The coinage of Nigrinian, the son of Carinus who died in childhood, is limited to gold aurei (which are exceedingly rare) and billon Aureliani, which, despite the large finds from this period, are still rare and elusive. Like so many who appeared on coinage in the later third century, we know precious little about the deified boy Nigrinian. An inscription identifies him as a grandson of Carus, but it can only be deduced from a technical study of the coinage that he was the son of Carinus. It is generally assumed that Magnia Urbica, Carinus' wife at the time he reigned, was Nigrinian's mother, but strictly speaking there is no evidence for this. The Historia Augusta gives a poor review of Carinus' character, especially when it comes to women: "By marrying and divorcing he took nine wives in all, and he put away some of them while they were pregnant...". If we believe the sketchy and unreliable sources for this period, Carinus was one of the great philanderers of his age and Nigrinian could have been born of any number of women.
