312 PONTIC KINGDOM. Polemo II (AD 38-64), with Britannicus (?). AR drachm . Dated RY 19 (AD 56/57). ΠΟΛΕΜΩ-NOC BACIAE[ΩC], diademed head of Polemo right / ΕΤΟVC - [ΙΙ]Θ, laureate, draped bust of Britannicus right. Cf.RG 36 (Britannicus). Very rare! Two exceptional portraits, the one of Britannicus perhaps the only one in silver available for this prince. NGC AU 3/5 - 4/5, light graffito. The identity of the laureate, youthful male portrait on the reverse of this rare issue is not certain, but has plausibly been proposed to be Britannicus, son of Claudius and Messalina, who died early in Nero's reign (February AD 55), likely poisoned by Nero or one of his henchmen. The bust of Nero also found on coins of Polemo II is much older and fleshier than this visage. As Britannicus was dead by the time of issue (AD 56/7), it may have been intended as a commemoration of the deceased Caesar; perhaps the court of Polemo, far removed from the intrigues of Rome, was not aware that the death of Britannicus was in any way suspicious. In any case Nero was apparently not amused, as the independent kingdom of Pontus was annexed by Rome in AD 64 and Polemo pensioned off to Cilicia. Weight:3,6 gr Diameter: 19,8 mm

Stationed in an Egypt that was overtaxed and burdened with considerable administrative corruption, Domitianus Domitianus took the purple in an effort to ameliorate the lot of the local people. He instituted agricultural reforms and repairs to the decrepit irrigation channels, undertook a reform of the local coinage in order to improve commerce, and strengthened the province militarily. Diocletian's response was swift and brutal, and he invaded Egypt. However, despite being heavily outnumbered Domitianus was able to withstand Diocletian's advance for months, and although by December of 297 Diocletian had control of Egypt, Alexandria refused to capitulate. Domitianus' ultimate fate is unrecorded, however he was likely killed or assassinated. In his fury, Diocletian authorised a general sack of the city and a massacre of the population. Her left leg is bent at the knee. A cross potent in either side on the field, wreath border. Rev.: Busts of Herakleios at left and Herakleios Constantine at right. Each wears a crown with a cross and a chlamys fastened on the right shoulder with a fibula. Herakleios is shown with a short beard and Herakleios Constantine is beardless. Herakleios wears his hair long at the sides and curled. Traces of circular inscription beginning at left, reconstituted according to parallel pieces, [D(omini)] n(ostri) Heracl[ius et H]era(clius) Co[nst(antinus)] p(er)p(etui) aug(usti)], (Our lords Herakleios and Herakleios Constantine, eternal augusti), wreath border. About Extremely Fine/Very Fine, with a nice natural cream patina. Commentary: Grierson has dated gold coins of Herakleios and Herakleios Constantine, on which the busts are of equal size (isocephalic), to the years 626–629. The size of Herakleios Constantine’s bust would seem to indicate (despite the short length of emperor Herakleios’s beard) that this seal was issued when Herakleios Constantine had reached relative maturity. Morrisson, “Du consul à l’empereur,” 259, table 1, is inclined to date the specimen 625–10 April 629. Cf. DO Seals 6, 15.1. Weight:12,3 gr Diameter: 24 mm

730 ANONYMOUS. Circa 10th century. Æ .Weight-Tessera ANONYMOUS. Circa 10th century. Æ . Weight-Tessera . Bendall, Weights 17 note; Hendy, Studies, p. 508; cf. Göbl, Antike 234 (tetarteron). VF The various monetiform bronze tokens are ascribed to the period following the introduction of the reduced weight gold tetarteron by Nicephorus II (963-969). Hendy has proposed the duo tetartwn as a weight for an issue of light weight coins from the reign of Basil II. However, the evidence for this "light weight coin" is debateable at best, and in any case the weights of the duo tetartwn and the tetarteron pieces are virtually identical, with well preserved specimens of both types averaging about 3.97 grams. If these pieces are not weights, they may be tesserae for the distribution of official donations.Very fine. Weight:4,1 gr Diameter: 14,8 mm
