Appointed commander of all Asia west of Mount Taurus in 223 BC and then recovered Seleucid territories from Attalus I of Pergamum. The fourth Syrian war and the preoccupation of Antiochus and his army with Ptolemy IV and Molon provided Achaeus the opportunity to declare himself king in Phrygia in the autumn of 220, thus finally severing the ties with Antiochus III. In 218 BC Attalus regained control over the Greek cities of northern Ionia, Aeolis and Troas and the Mysian lands as far east as the Megistos river, which occupied Achaeus during the fourth Syrian war. He held power only until Antiochus had reached a peace with Ptolemy, and issued bronze coinage in his name; Antiochus then allied with Attalus to retake the territory Achaeus had claimed. Achaeus withstood a seige in the citadel of Sardis for two years. After sustaining a siege of two years, the citadel at last fell into the hands of Antiochus in 213 BC, through the treachery of Bolis (who had been employed by Sosibius, minister to Ptolemy). Bolis pledged to deliver Achaeus to safety, but turned him over to Antiochus, who immediately put him to death.

457 Constantine I, AD 310-337. AR, Siliqua. 3.11 g. 19.53 mm. Constantinopolis. Obv: Head of Constantine I, rosette-diademed, right. The portrait with a rosette diadem symbolizes the imperial dignity and divine stature of the emperor. The finely engraved bust highlights Constantine's pivotal role as the founder of the new capital, Constantinople, and as the first Christian emperor. Rev: CONSTANTINVS AVG, CONS. Victory, winged, draped, advancing left, holding wreath in right hand and palm in left hand. Victory, the winged goddess, advances to the left. In her right hand she holds a wreath, and in her left, a palm branch – both classical symbols of triumph. Under Constantine I, Roman coinage began to convey stronger ideological messages. The depiction of Victory is a prime example: despite the rise of Christianity, traditional pagan symbolism remained present, yet it was increasingly interpreted as divine legitimization of the emperor's authority. This siliqua is rare, especially in this state of preservation. It was struck during a formative period in Roman history – marked by the establishment of Christianity, the foundation of Constantinople (in AD 330) as the new capital, and the transformation of the empire from pagan to Christian, making it of exceptional historical importance. 751 Islamic. Ottoman, Sultan Mustafa III, 1171 AH, Year 3, double zolta, 60 para (3 KG) Obv: Es-Sultan'ul Berreyn / ve Hakan'ul Bahreyn / es-Sultan bin / Sultan → "Sultan over the two continents and ruler over the two seas, the Sultan, son of a Sultan" This titulature emphasizes the imperial greatness of the ruler, who governed both Anatolia (Asia) and Rumelia (Europe), as well as the Black Sea and the Mediterranean. Rev: Es-Sultan Mustafa bin Ahmed Han / d'emre mulkehu / duribe fi Islambul / 1171 → "Sultan Mustafa, son of Ahmed Han. By divine command, his reign was established. Struck in Islambul (Istanbul) in the year 1171 AH" The phrase d'emre mulkehu ("by divine command his reign") refers to the divine origin of sovereignty – a typical motif in Islamic rulership ideology. □ Sultan Mustafa III (reigned 1757-1774) was an intelligent and reform-minded ruler during a period of political and military upheaval. He recognized the deficiencies of the administrative and military systems and pursued reforms in education and taxation, attempting to adapt the Ottoman Empire to the challenges of the 18th century. Coinage played a central role in the political communication of the state: it served to manifest legitimate rule to subjects and religious authorities – through script, imagery, and symbolism. □ This massive iron coin die originates from an Ottoman mint and was crafted for striking a double zolta – a silver coin with a face value of 60 para. It is an extremely rare specimen, with both die halves (obverse and reverse) fully preserved – an outstanding example of Ottoman precision craftsmanship and numismatic history. Coin dies were produced under strict supervision in the imperial mint (Darphane-i Amire) in Istanbul. Each piece was a handcrafted original, into which the coin design was engraved. Production required skilled engravers and a specialized infrastructure. Complete iron coin die pairs have survived only very rarely, as they were often destroyed, melted down, or worn out over time. Most surviving examples show only one side or are fragmentary. This complete die set, with both sides in excellent preservation, is therefore of great historical importance.

860 AE Roman eagle statuette (AD 1st-2nd centuries) A bronze eagle with folded wings. Weight: 46.20 g. Diameter: 44.77 mm. In the Roman world the eagle was seen as 'the symbol and agent of apotheosis after death' and an eagle was released from the top of an emperor's funeral pyre to signal the journey of the soul heavenwards. Eagles were also depicted in this role on monumental art, however, the eagle was not reserved only for the ruling class but was also found on funerary altars of private citizens. Cicero quotes a Latin version of Aeschylus' Prometheus Bound in which the bird is called the god's satellite (Iovis satelles, Tusculanae Disputationes II.10.24) and Virgil writes of it as the god's weapon-bearer (Iovis armiger, Aeneid IX.564), an allusion to the fact that it is often shown in art as clutching in its claws a thunderbolt. The eagle was adopted as the principal emblem of a whole legion under Marius in 104 BC (Pliny HN 10.5.16). These legionary emblems were in silver or gold and stood on a thunderbolt. The eagle was also used as a symbol of the Praetorian Guard or as the legionary signum of a unit. Many images of standards, including those with eagles, can be seen on Trajan's Column (Toynbee 1973, Animals in Roman Art and Life, 241-242).
